Nature reserves, long woodland trails, village, green meadows

In Brief

In Roman times, the dense woodlands of what is now East Hertfordshire offered a great challenge to road builders. With only the sun and stars as pointers, they carved a straight line from London to York, passing through this huge forested area, a route later called Ermine Street. These ancient woods are still standing today. This walk offers challenges of its own.

Parts of this great wooded area are devoted to timber, parts are pristine and hold a great variety of trees and plants. For a change from the deep woods, this walk visits some of the nearby meadows and valleys.

Two places are available for refreshments, at the north and south limits of the route. For enquiries at the Farmer's Boy, ring 01992-511017. For the Woodman and Olive, it is essential to ring 01992-463719 because they occasionally close for a private function, even during the day on weekends.

This walk can be shortened by dividing it into two separate walks, the Northern Walk which optionally visits Brickendon, and the Southern Walk which takes you through Wormley West End. They both make use of the central section through an interesting area of isolated woodland.

There are some nettles on this walk, making shorts inadvisable. Boots are optional in dry weather but recommended if there is any sign of rain. The walk would be fine for your dog, with only one (raisable) stile.

The walk begins at Bayford Station (see end) or the Martin's Green car park in Cock Lane, at the corner of Danemead Wood, near Hoddesdon, Herts. The nearest postcode is EN11 8GG. The car park is on a Z-bend in the lane. The name board says Ermine Street (Martin's Green) Welcome. Don't confuse this little car park with the Danemead camp site next door which is often crowded with cars. For more details, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

- 1 The footpath sign just before the entrance to the car park says Public Restricted Byway 24, Goose Green ¾. Your route goes up the Roman road Ermine Street but misses Goose Green. (If you have an old map, note that the Huntsman pub in that village is no more.)

Ermine Street was a Roman road running from London to Lincoln and York. It was named much later after an English tribe known as the Earningas. (Oddly, no one knows what the Romans called it.) Its straight north-south route has formed parts of numerous modern-day trunk roads, tracks and city streets.

From the dusty parking area, follow the main track into the woods, following a mauve arrow. In 50m or so, you pass a metal barrier. In about another 200m you will see a sign for the Danemead Nature Reserve. Turn left here, on a narrow path which bypasses two metal gates and takes you through a wooden swing-gate into the nature reserve. There is a bench seat on your left and a notice board tells you details of this important site.

Danemead covers about 14 acres (5.6 ha) and is an important scientific site, protecting several rare plant species. It is known for its hornbeams (trees with those pointed slightly waxy leaves and catkins).

Decision point. You immediately have a choice. For the Southern Walk (7 km=4½ miles), skip to near the end of this guide and do the section called Hertfordshire Way (West). For the full walk or the Northern Walk (which brings you here from the other direction), continue as below.

2 Turn immediately right after the notice board on a narrow path along the right-hand edge of the nature reserve. Your path takes you over a flat bridge and out through a wooden swing-gate past another notice board. Bear right over a bridge across the Spital Brook and turn immediately sharp left over another bridge. You are now at a meeting of wide tracks. Ignore a major track on your left and a muddy track on your right and cross straight over to a wooden swing-gate which bears a sign for Hoddesdon Park Wood. The path rises gently through this wonderful woodland. After 300m or so, you meet a wide crossing track: continue straight over. In another 200m you pass a post and a side junction on your right. Note that the post has red and mauve bands. (Just before the post, if you look to your left, you will see a path up a bank, which leads directly along the edge of the wood for 250m to the Woodland Route described in the next section, avoiding the stretch along the lane.) After a 3-plank bridge you pass another red-mauve post. Look left now for a small wooden gate. Go through this gate and turn right on a path leading up to a metal barrier. Fork left just before the barrier to meet a massive tree trunk and a tarmac lane. Turn left on the lane. It is a relief to be out in the open – but this respite is short-lived.

3 In 250m, go left at a footpath sign through a small metal kissing-gate. In 100m or so, you are at the edge of woodland. Two routes are available: the official route is perfect for lovers of the assorted delights of chickens, gates, green pastures and absolutely beautiful pedigree cattle. The woodland route is used by everyone else.

Official Route. Go right through an avoidable wooden gate and take a path alongside the pastures on your right. You pass free-range chickens on your right. At the corner of the farm, your path goes sharp right through a small wooden gate. It goes right again in the next corner and left through a wooden swing-gate into a small meadow. At the other side, go through a metal kissing-gate and along the left-hand side of a pasture. A kissing-gate leads you along the left-hand edge of another pasture. In the far corner, go through a kissing-gate and keep straight ahead through woods along a boardwalk.

from the right at a kissing-gate. Keep straight ahead through woods along a boardwalk.

- 4 The boardwalk goes over a damp area of reed grass and comes out into a hay field. Follow the left-hand edge to come out through a new hedge to a tarmac lane at a bend. Keep left along the lane past the small industrial unit of Monks Green. Just before the last new grey/green building, with a house on your left, fork left at a marker post on a dirt track. When you reach a hay field, veer left along the edge. At the other side, keep straight ahead on a wide grassy strip beside a new fence on your right. As the path curves left, look to your left for a hidden wooden swing-gate. Go left through this gate, over a flat bridge, and turn right on a grassy path. You come out into a field of grass: keep straight ahead across the centre, heading for a large house. Cross straight over a shingle drive. (To the left, the drive leads to the Celtic Harmony Camp, an education charity which enables young people to experience the "stone age" at first hand.) At the far side, go through a small wooden swing-gate to a 4-way signpost in the precincts of that house, in the outskirts of Brickendon. (Bourne Orchard was originally built around 1600.)

There is an excellent pub here in Brickendon and the village is worth seeing. It requires a there-and-back trip of 600m each way. Do as follows. Cross straight over, across the grass, to a main road and turn left on it. You pass a colourful cattery and what must be a unique chapel, the Holy Cross, built in 1932 in Tudor style with a fine wooden beamed interior. The Farmer's Boy pub is on the right by the green. Retrace your steps to the big house and the 4-way signpost.

Brickendon ("the hill of Bricca's people") has always been highly prized. King Henry II "gave" the manor to the monks of Waltham and granted it freedom from tax, known as the "Liberty of Brickendon". But the monks had rivals: none other than the Benedictine monks of Westminster Abbey, who went as far as forging Saxon papers to lay claim to it. It turns out their main focus of attention was a house called "Maidenhead" where certain "ladies of the night" needed spiritual comfort. Within the parish there have been several great houses: one is Brickendonbury and its estate, with a long history. Another is Brickendon Grange, long-time host of every kind of sport. Brickendon is one of the most haunted places in Hertfordshire (see "Haunted Hertfordshire, A Ghostly Gazetteer" by Ruth Stratton and Nicholas Connell).

The "Farmer's Boy" pub is open all day and has food daily, with a very attractive garden in the back. Beers are fairly standard, plus one guest. Walkers report a friendly reception. The house next door, the "Five Horseshoes", was once a rival beer house.

- 5 At the 4-way fingerpost, turn left (that is, right if coming from the village) across the shingle in front of the house with its smart porch. Follow a wide grassy path, through a kissing-gate and bushes, leading into a rough meadow. Keep to the right-hand side, alongside a bramble hedge, peppered with trees of every size. A stile (note: the bar is liftable) leads into woods. A short path takes you into a meadow of wild grass, still following the right-hand edge. A rider's gate leads into Cowheath Wood. At a marker post, your path immediately veers left on a course through the centre of the wood. Your path is fairly evident and easy to follow: if it splits, it re-joins. In nearly 250m, the old coppice gives way to pines as you pass a marker post. In another 150m, you meet a wide crossing forestry track. Go straight over, skipping over a muddy track, by a commemorative bench. (The bench is welcome but it has an alarming see-saw tendency.) The path goes through bracken, passing another marker post, leading into an attractive birch forest. In 200m, you meet another marker post, this time offering a choice.

Decision point. If you are doing the shorter Northern Walk (6½ km=4 miles), skip to near the end of this guide and do the section called Hertfordshire Way (East). For the full walk, continue as here ...

- 6 The path goes through a previously thinned-out area and over a 2-plank bridge into darker woodland. You come immediately to a wooden step-over barrier. Follow a path between wire fences, followed by a bridge and a swing-gate leading up into a meadow. Keep straight ahead on a path up the centre, passing under an oak. At the top, go through a kissing-gate, followed by another (if the catch is jammed, use the large metal gate). A small pasture and a kissing-gate (probably not needed) take you onto a tarmac lane.
- 7 Cross straight over the lane on a concrete drive and through a small wooden gate. Immediately ignore a kissing-gate on your left and a path on your right and keep straight ahead, following a wire fence on your left. After the next kissing-gate, your path veers left across the meadow. You come through a line of trees into the next meadow. Ignore two paths on your left here and keep on dead centre across the meadow. You come through yet another swing-gate onto a path across a meadow with waving grass. A swing-gate, a band of trees and a 3-plank bridge lead onto a main road.
- 8 Cross straight over the main road onto a minor road, West End Road. But, in only 5m, at a small marker post, turn left on a narrow path into the woods, running parallel to the road on your left. This wood is known as Emanuel Pollards. At a T-junction, turn right into the woods, thus leaving the noise of the road. Go straight down, avoiding paths branching off to the right, to meet an unneeded kissing-gate on the other side. Now follow a fenced path down the side of a large horse pasture with good views ahead. A line of yews leads down to the road opposite the Woodman and Olive pub.

The "Woodman and Olive" belongs to the normally worthy McMullen of Hertford Brewery. The location is admirable, in the valley of Wormley West End with a fine large garden. This establishment is pervaded by a Greek subculture and people expecting a typical English pub will find the exact opposite. Casual walkers report a rather chilly reception and disappointing food and drink. Note that the pub sometimes closes for a private function, even during "normal opening hours" and walkers must therefore always check by ringing 01992-463719 before planning a visit. Further feedback will be welcome.

- 9 Turn right on the road for just 50m and go left at a signpost on a path which runs along the right-hand side of the pub's car park, through a (broken) gate in the fence, to the back of the garden. (If you visited the pub, simply keep left out of the entrance and go to the back of the garden.) Go through a small wooden gate over a bridge into woodland. Keep straight ahead through the wood, slightly uphill. After nearly 200m, a pair of arrows on a marker post point you to the left. As you reach the corner of a meadow with attractive views, ignore a stile in the corner and keep left beside a metal fence. Continue over a plank bridge, on a woodland path, over a 2-plank bridge and under a pylon (where the bracken may be quite dense). You come through a small (broken) wooden gate onto a road. Turn left on the road to reach a T-junction with a major road in 250m.

- 10 Turn right on the major road and, in 20m, turn left on a woodland path. You are now on another section of Ermine Street, the Roman road, and you will be following it to the end of the walk. This fine sheltered path runs under oak and ash trees and comes to a tarmac drive, running beside a rather stylish, but deathly quiet, development of brown-board chalets of White Stubbs Farm. Ignore a footpath on your right and keep ahead through woods to a main road. Turn right on the road and, in 100m, turn left on quiet Cock Lane. In 400m, as the lane bends left past Little Grove Lodge, just after a junction with Pembridge Lane, turn right on a byway marked Martin's Green $\frac{1}{4}$. In 600m, your path goes between bollards and runs through more mixed woodland. You come out to a road. Turn right and immediately left into the Martin's Green car park where the walk began.

Hertfordshire Way (West)

Take this route if you are doing the shorter Southern Walk.

- a At the notice board in the Danemead Nature Reserve, keep straight on across the centre of the area, heading for trees. Go through a swing-gate beside a large wooden gate onto a winding rooty path. (These nice new gates are dog and backpack friendly.) You come through a another swing-gate and reach the start of a boardwalk, just as a path joins you from the right. After the boardwalk (designed to protect the flora as well as to keep you dry), go through a swing-gate by another notice board for Danemead. Turn left here on a wide straight path. In only 50m, you will see an old metal gate on your left and the remains of a wooden fence on your right. Turn right here on a narrow path uphill. Don't miss this turn!
- b Your path winds its way through larches [2017: and round a fallen tree]. Soon you can see on your left a rough meadow and a smallholding. Roughly 30m into the woods again, avoid a wide path forking right into pines and keep straight on. You shortly reach a swing-gate on your left. Ignore the swing-gate and keep ahead as your path wheels right. You are in a wood of spectacular tall straight pines. After passing several marker posts you come through another swing-gate. At a marker post, your path veers right over a bridge.
- c The path rises past another marker post. Only 20m later, another marker post forces a left turn on a narrow path into larches. Immediately the trees change to birch. The terrain is botanically very rich with marsh plants, shrubs and ferns, but the ground is bumpy so you have to watch your feet. You now have a fairly straight section, marked by several posts which have a nice clear white top. Looking left, you see a deep valley with oak woods as you continue along the wide strip of marshy plants. Some walkers miss the next white-topped marker post, because the tendency is to keep left whilst admiring the oak woods. If this is the case, you need to go to your right to find the marker post, then left, back on track. At the next marker post, your path suddenly turns right. In 80m, you meet another marker post at a 3-way junction. Turn sharp left here.

Your walk now continues from section 6 of the main walk.

Hertfordshire Way (East)

Take this route if you are doing the shorter Northern Walk, omitting Wormley West End.

- A At the marker post, keep straight ahead, ignoring the right fork. In 80m, at a marker post, your path suddenly turns left. You now have a fairly straight section, marked by several posts which have a nice clear white top. The terrain is botanically very rich with marsh plants, shrubs and ferns, but the ground is bumpy so you have to watch your feet. After more than 300m, finally you reach a marker post forcing a right turn. You descend to cross a bridge.
- B Your path rises again, veering left, on a nice clear trail. You come through a swing-gate into an impressive pinewood. (The Private notice only applies to motorbikes.) At the next marker post, after little more than 50m, your path veers right. After a 300m woodland stroll, you meet another swing-gate (which most people use without thinking – but this is FFW!). Ignore the swing-gate and keep left on a narrow path. Soon there is a rough meadow and a smallholding on your right, before your path goes deep into the woods again [2017: and round a fallen tree]. After 400m on this section of the path, you come down to a T-junction with a much wider path.
- C Turn left on the wide path for about 50m. At a notice board announcing Danemead Nature Reserve, turn right through a wooden swing-gate onto a boardwalk (designed to protect the flora as well as to keep you dry). Immediately after the end of the boardwalk, fork right over a tiny bridge on a narrow path. This winding rooty path takes you in 150m through a new wooden swing-gate. (These nice new gates are dog and backpack friendly.) You arrive at another swing-gate beside a large wooden gate. Keep straight on, going past a notice board which should be familiar from your outward journey. A wooden swing-gate and a narrow path beside metal fences leads to a wide track, Ermine Street. Turn right on the track, quickly leading to the Martin's Green car park where the walk began.

Getting there

By car: the Martin's Green car park is easily accessible from the A10 trunk road and hence from the M25. One way is to leave the A10 eastwards at the exit for Broxbourne into Turnford. At the next roundabout, turn left as for Hoddesdon, Wormley. In 1¼ miles at a roundabout, ignore a road left marked Broxbourne Woods. In a further 1¼ miles, where the road divides with a left filter before a mini-roundabout, turn left on Cock Lane as for Sheredes School. The road executes a left and right double bend. Later it goes over the A10 and into woods. The car park is on the right, at a kink in the road, ¾ mile after going over the A10.

By bus/train:

Brickendon is served by Bayford Station (half-hourly from Moorgate, including Sunday) which is only ½ mile away, with a good footway.

bus 308 runs from Hertford to Brickendon, Mon-Thu. Check the timetables.
