Parkland forest, ancient earthwork, woodland, pubs, views, bluebells

In Brief

Here is another unforgettable, varied walk full of hidden Chiltern delights in South Oxfordshire, not far from London. At every turn there is something new and unexpected, separated by a sequence of delightful woods and other surprises. Along the way, you walk a generous and beautiful section of Grim's Dyke, accompanied by those famous red kites. As is typical of this site, you will be using some secret paths which are not marked on the map and known only to locals. Please don't worry if you are not used to walks of over 10 miles: this walk is so varied and interesting you will not notice the length – and there are very few steep parts.

There are several excellent opportunities for nourishment along the way. To enquire at the King William, ring 01491-681845; for the Cherry Tree, ring 01491-680430.

There are some nettles on this walk so shorts are not advisable. It was completely dry when walked in June, making trainers ok as footwear, although in wetter times, boots are recommended. Most of the stiles have a gap, or liftable hatch, for your dog but three are a tight squeeze.

The walk begins at Nettlebed, near Henley-on-Thames, Oxfordshire, postcode RG9 5BA where there is roadside parking. For more details, and alternative starting points, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

Leg 1: Nettlebed to Nuffield 4½ km=2¾ miles

- 1 Starting at the green, walk through the strangely bleak main street of Nettlebed, passing the White Hart on your right. Just before the Field Kitchen Café on the left, turn right on a footpath, passing the village club. At the top, opposite Popindoo, turn right, then left on the main Watlington Street, using the side path. As the road begins to curve right, turn left at a fingerpost, taking the right-hand option, the byway, a narrow sunken path. In 100m or so, at a T-junction, turn left on another path, soon passing some houses on your right.
- 2 Follow this attractive path between hedges, soon ignoring a footpath on your left. The good surface suggests this may be an ancient trackway. After 500m, you come out to a junction of tracks. Keep straight ahead on a wide track through woodland. The track comes out of the woodland and continues to Huntercombe End Farm. Go straight through the farm on a concrete track and turn left on a tarmac lane. Follow the lane, ignoring a pair of footpaths on the left, until you reach, on your right, the flint walls of Nuffield Park Wood.
- 3 Turn right through the pillared entrance into the wood and immediately fork left through a small metal gate beside a large one. You are in a magical woodland with a deep atmosphere. In late spring the whole wood is carpeted with a bluebells. Only 70m into the wood, you come to a rather indistinct junction of paths. Ignore the white arrow pointing straight ahead for the main path and instead turn left and (important) after 5m continue straight ahead on a narrow path, following another set of white arrows on trees running almost parallel to the main path. (Don't worry if you miss this turn and end up staying on the main path. At the end, by a fence, simply turn left and join the walk at the grounds of the large house.) Follow the path through the centre of the wood, always following the white arrows. In 450m, near the end of the wood, go straight over a junction of paths. The path now runs between a tall wire fence and the grounds of a large house on your left. After the fence, keep straight ahead through holly. You come out to the main A4130 road beside a drive leading to Nuffield Place.

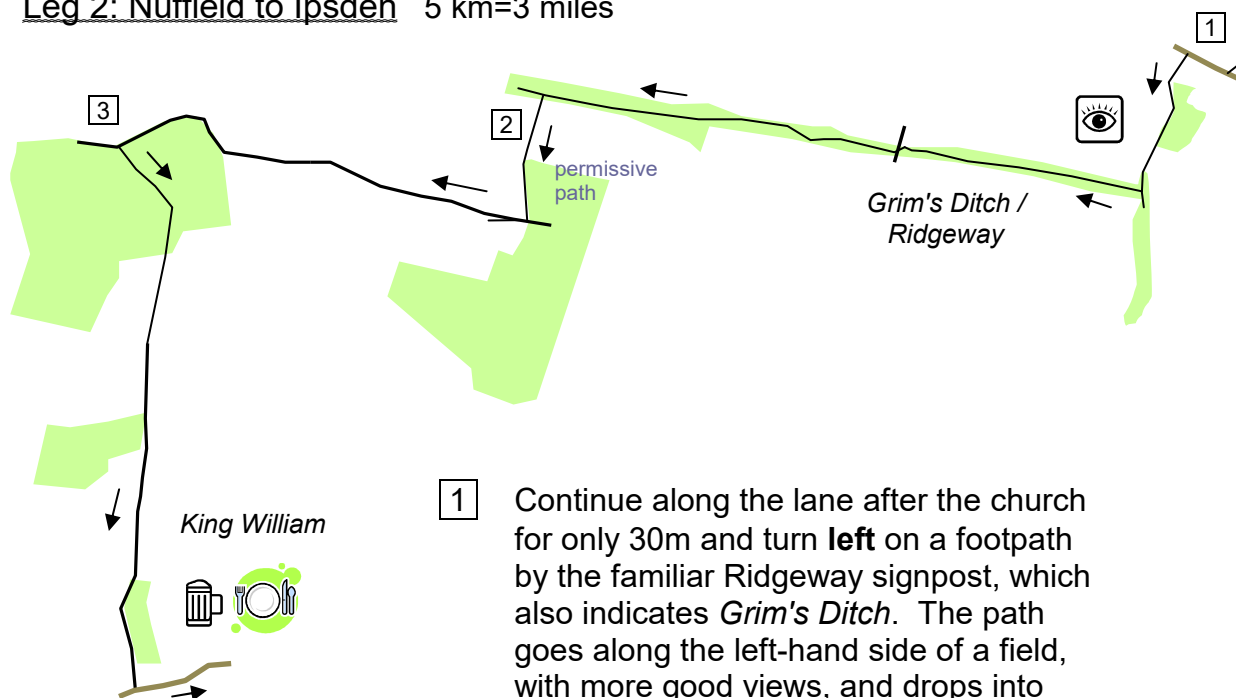

Nuffield Place (not seen unless you walk up the drive) was the home of W.M. Morris, aka Lord Nuffield, founder of Morris Motors (and an Oxford college). The house is a handsome mansion in an equally fine garden. But, for the home of Britain's one-time richest men, it's not exactly palatial, although it is full of gadgets and mod-cons from the 1930s, 40s and 50s. For Lord Nuffield was obsessed with mechanics. A cupboard in his bedroom, looking like a wardrobe, was in fact a workbench with every kind of tool imaginable and here he would tinker in the small hours. Always a modest man, he once entertained the emperor Haile Selassie who was surprised and amused when Lady Nuffield herself brought the food to the table. Nuffield Place belongs to the National Trust and is open nearly every day, except during the winter.

- 4 Keep right along the main road, using the footway. In 150m, cross the road to a building which used to be a pub. Facing what's left of the pub, turn right on a wide dusty track. You pass one of those colourful Ridgeway signposts. Keep straight on along the track, passing two new houses on your left and a golf tee on your right. Go straight over a golf fairway to the familiar acorn symbol on the other side, then go across another similarly. Continue on a path through a wood. After 150m the path comes out of the wood and goes diagonally across a third fairway. The path now runs just to the right of a black golfers' hut, then diagonally across grass. You have great views right across Oxfordshire. After a kissing-gate and another diagonal path, a short path leads you to a tarmac lane in Nuffield Village opposite the church. Turn right on the lane.

A church stood here at least from the 1200s when it belonged to the nuns of Goring priory. Notable features inside include the round Norman font and some medieval brasses. As a "Ridgeway church", it offers succour to pilgrims in the form of do-it-yourself tea/coffee and cakes (in the fridge).

Leg 2: Nuffield to Ipsden 5 km=3 miles

- 1 Continue along the lane after the church for only 30m and turn left on a footpath by the familiar Ridgeway signpost, which also indicates Grim's Ditch. The path goes along the left-hand side of a field, with more good views, and drops into woodland to reach another Ridgeway signpost. Turn right along a beautiful beechwood path along Grim's Ditch which you will be following for 1½ km, possibly accompanied by the whoopee! sounds of the red kites.

Grim's Ditch or Dyke is the name given to several similar earthworks in England, dating probably from around 300 BC. There is no single dyke: they appear in different places ranging from Berkshire, North Oxfordshire, as far as Essex. This one extends westwards to Mongewell. Why were they built? No one knows: possibly as markers of territory, not for defence as they are too low.

At first you are on a low path with the dyke on your right. After around 150m you switch sides. In 500m, you have a grassy meadow on your right and your path directs you left on a drive for a house named Woodlands with a water tap which the Ridgeway provides for its thirsty pilgrims. Go immediately right again on a sunken path which is in fact in the ditch itself. The path goes through a modified kissing-gate and climbs out of the ditch. It zigzags left-right over a stile or (much easier) through another of those kissing-gates. The ditch is now very distinct on your right and you have another 400m to go in its company. The path goes down and up over tree roots and on your left you can see a wheat field. At the beginning of a second wheatfield you meet a marker post with a green kissing-gate on your left. You are unlikely to miss this junction but this turn is crucial!

2 Turn left through the kissing-gate on a permissive path, by courtesy of Woodhouse Farm. The path goes up the left-hand side of a field along a generous grass verge. At the end of the field, at a marker post, turn right and immediately take a path on the right of a hedge. The path gradually descends into the valley towards a hotchpotch of forestry shacks. It finally curves right by the edge of a wood, passing the white farmhouse on your right. Immediately opposite the house, turn left uphill into the woods by a yellow arrow, marking the Chiltern Way (CW).

3 Follow this nice wide path up through Wicks Wood. At a double junction, keep straight on, still following the yellow arrow. At the bottom, as you emerge from the wood, keep straight ahead on a wide path across a barley field. Now continue ahead past fields and plantations and between the buildings of Poors Farm in a valley. You pass a sheep field and a house and your wide dusty track finally takes you out to a tarmac lane beside Stone Farm House. Turn left on the lane, quickly reaching the King William.

The King William is a Brakspear pub in an ideal location with outdoor seating that offers views over the Oxfordshire countryside. Food is freshly cooked from a limited menu which is always a good sign. Beer, including one guest ale, is served direct from the cask. The pub is open daily from 12, closing in the afternoon on weekdays and at 3pm Sundays. They generously allow customers who are walkers use of the overflow car park, no matter for how long, making this site an alternative starting point. Note that the tables across the lane belong to the pub: keep your own food pouch tightly closed!

Leg 3: Ipsden to Checkendon 4¼ km=2¾ miles

- 1 Continue past the pub along the lane for 300m and turn right at a fingerpost onto a path downhill between fields, still on the CW. In summer, red poppies here are rife. At the bottom, turn right on a tarmac lane and, in 90m, turn left, still on the CW, on a grassy path uphill. At the top of the field, at a marker post, keep straight on, ignoring a footpath on the right. Your path veers left between hedges and goes out between posts. Continue straight ahead in the meadow, with a new wire fence on your left and a hedge to your right. You exit, between posts, down to a tarmac lane. Turn right on the lane.
- 2 Immediately turn right again up a bank and into a crop field. Turn left along the edge and right in the corner (although, strictly, the path crosses the field) and go left through a wooden swing-gate in the corner. Veer a bit left and quickly right uphill in the meadow and, at the top, go through a wooden swing-gate into the woods of Berins Hill. You need to follow the white arrows on trees as you ascend the woodland. Where you meet a wide path coming from the left, go straight across on an even narrower path opposite. [2018: This path may be obscure: you will see some farm buildings ahead of you; once you have reached the marker post mentioned below, your route is alongside the hedge that runs beside them.] Shortly after, you come to a marker post. Ignore the right turn here, thus leaving the CW, and keep straight ahead following a white arrow. Eventually, your path curves round right to go through a swing-gate. Cross a track and go through a new wooden swing-gate onto a narrow path. Go through a second wooden gate and past a rather untidy collection of farm machinery. Finally pass between new wooden barriers onto a tarmac lane. Turn left on the lane.

3 In just short of 100m, just past the entrance to the picturesque Garsons Farm, turn right at a fingerpost on a path into woods of Wheeler's Copse. Soon your path runs through a clear section and forks right downhill, quite steeply, in the direction of a white arrow. Don't miss this turn! You come down to the valley bottom where there is a crossing path and a post with yellow arrows. Go straight over the crossing path and continue uphill. After roughly 200m, you will notice a marker post with yellow arrows. Ignore the right fork here and keep straight on. Your path comes out beside some wooden gates by horse paddocks and continues on a dirt drive past houses to a tarmac lane by a small pond.

4 Cross straight over the lane onto a track by an old barn on your right. Opposite the end of the barn, look to your left to find a narrow path through the bracken, which may be obscure in high summer. Fork left onto this path. The undergrowth quickly clears, revealing a nice wide woodland path. In 250m you emerge from the wood beside some houses on your left, in the little hamlet of Scots Common near Checkendon, and reach a T-junction with a wider track. Turn left on the track to reach, in under 100m, one of the most unusual and unspoilt inns in South Oxfordshire. Welcome to the Black Horse!

The Black Horse is an old woodcutter's pub hidden in what is still partly thick forest, a survivor from past centuries (and please use it so that it lasts into future centuries!). The unpretentious low-beamed interior is like a time capsule. There's a generous selection of beers. But this is not a great gastronomic experience: they can rustle up a roll or baguette to eat on one of those wide wooden tables in the yard. Boots and dogs are welcome – outside! The pub closes at 2.30 weekdays. An interesting historical nugget: this site was a camp for Polish families after WW2 (see also the Amersham walk in this series).

Leg 4: Checkendon to Stoke Row 2¼ km=1½ miles

1 After a rest break, go back in the direction you came but this time keep left on the tarmac lane. In 100m, on your left are two signed footpaths. Take the path diagonally left over a stile, avoiding a path to its left by a large metal gate. (The author walked happily through two fields of cattle. However, if they are grazing and they worry you, simply take the footpath left beside the metal gate, follow a path through the woods and turn right - but not sharp right - on a road into Stoke Row.) Go along the left-hand side of the pasture and continue in a straight line to go over a stile on the far side just to the left of some farm buildings. Turn left on the road and, in 30m, go right over a stile on a footpath. Cross a tarmac drive and go over another stile into a second pasture. Keep to the right-hand side and, at the far end, go through a swing-gate into woodland.

2 At a T-junction in the woods, turn left but immediately take the right fork, following white arrows, towards a corrugated barn where your path veers left and turns right between fences and meadows. In 40m, ignore a stile on your left and avoid another just before the end. (Everyone uses the straight path now and use of the short cuts has lapsed.) At a T-junction turn left on a track and, at a junction, continue ahead on a residential lane to reach a road in Stoke Row. Turn right towards the village. In 100m or so, on your left is the Maharaja's Well. This is a celebrated historical landmark, an ornate but working deep well, with a story attached. For full details see the other walk in this series "The Maharaja at the Regatta".

3 Continue on the road, passing the neighbouring quite lovable Well Cottage. Ignore a footpath on the left and, immediately after it, go left through a wooden swing-gate into the Cherry Orchard which was also paid for by the Maharaja. Turn right, walk parallel to the road and, at the end, go through a little wooden gate to re-join the road. Go straight over a crossroads to find, on your left, the Cherry Tree Inn, a cosy Brakspear pub / hotel with a full and enterprising menu, Michelin listed. After a possible break, continue to the next proper signposted junction at the start of the green and turn left on Newlands Lane.

Leg 5: Stoke Row to Nettlebed 5 km=3 miles

1 Follow this twisty lane, staying on the main tarmac, as it bends right and left. At the second left bend there is thick woodland on your right with a double fingerpost indicating two bridleways. Take the left-hand bridleway, the one straight ahead, slightly downhill, into the centre of the wood. Within 100m you will see white arrows on a tree indicating a fork: take the right fork. As you approach a tarmac lane, veer right to cross the lane and take a bridleway diagonally opposite. It leads to another tarmac lane: cross straight over to another tarmac lane marked with a footpath sign. In 300m, just after Little Farm, turn right through a wooden swing-gate into a grass meadow.

2 Take the faint footpath slightly left across the meadow. At the other side, go through two green metal kissing-gates and take a faint path, a fraction left, down a meadow of tall grass. At the bottom, go through a small metal gate and continue, slightly left, up a hay field. At the top, to regain your breath, it is worth glancing back at the marvellous grassy valley, in a long perfect V-shape with steep sides, that you have just passed. Go through a new green kissing-gate. Your path runs along the left-hand side of a barley field and over a stile into a tree garden under a quite magnificent (turkey?) oak.

Keep to the left-hand side to the left of a wire fence (to oblige the owners: the official path runs next to their house). The path goes between fences, then right and left to meet a marker post. Go straight over a junction of paths, beside a garden fence and out on a shingle drive to meet the main road in Highmoor.

- 3 Turn right on the road for just 40m and sharp left on a signposted byway marked Bix 2. Follow this semi-tarmac path deep into the beeches and tall oaks of Highmoor Common. At a 4-way junction with a fingerpost, go over the crossing bridleway and continue as before on the byway. You pass on your right entrances to some houses of Lower Highmoor and reach a gravel driveway. Go straight over, following a yellow arrow, on what is now a more typical woodland path. After a majestic 300m or so, you will see on your left some white arrows on a tree trunk. Turn right here on a narrow path through undergrowth and, in high summer, plenteous nettles. Don't mis this turn! Your path runs through a luminous area of forest and, after 200m, comes down to a very wide forestry track. Turn left on the track. Soon the track narrows and runs through attractive woodland. Finally it comes out onto the main B481 road again. Turn right along the roadside.

- 4 The next section is an unexpected route through the Sue Ryder Nettlebed Hospice. Visitors are welcome to enjoy these private grounds (as all the local people do). If you have any doubts, or maybe if you are a large rambling group, stay on the main road and turn left at the roundabout back into Nettlebed. In 60m, turn left across the road and walk along the driveway into the Sue Ryder centre. Follow the drive as it curves right and avoid turnings off to pass the magnificent house on your left. Keep dead straight on a narrower drive slightly uphill. It leads out through wrought-iron gates, passing a notice saying: We hope you enjoy these grounds. (If you did, perhaps make a donation?) A short lane, used as a parking area, leads to the eastern end of Nettlebed where the walk began.

Getting there

By car: the walk starts at Nettlebed, Oxon. The easiest approach is via Henley-on-Thames: turn right in the main street following the A4130, signposted to Nettlebed or Oxford. The road runs along the lovely Fairmile and reaches Nettlebed after 8 miles. Park at this side of the village (the east side), near the Kiln, on the road behind the little bus shelter on the green. Or in the parking area on the left, by the gates to the Nettlebed Hospice.

Nettlebed can also be reached from Reading / Caversham along the B481, from Oxford and from the M40 near Stokenchurch, via Christmas Common.

Alternative starting points are: by the church in Nuffield, in the overflow car park of the King William, at the roadside in Stoke Row.

By bus/train: bus 139 from Henley to Nettlebed, including Sunday. Check the timetables.
