Village, high hills, distant views, woodland, windmills, green meadows

In Brief

The walk up to the Clayton Windmills on top of the South Downs must be one of the best known classic walks in Sussex. But this walk takes a different angle, leading you through another village and over some wonderful landscapes, and along paths that even seasoned walkers may not know. It is perfect at any time of the year.

There are a few nettles and brambles on the lower paths that might irritate bare legs but any sensible clothing and footwear will be fine. Your dog will love this walk (except possibly for a stile at the start of Leg 3).

The walk begins at the public car park in Ditchling, East Sussex, behind the Village Hall, postcode BN6 8TT. It is signed near the crossroads with a blue "P Free". It has a loo. For more details, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

Ditchling dates back at least to Saxon times. The first record is from 765 as "Dicelinga", that is, "Dicul's people". King Alfred the Great held lands here. From 1435 until the 1900s the land was owned by the Marquess of Abergavenny (see other walks in this series "Coldrum Stones and Luddesdown" and "A Way Through the Rocks"). In 2007, Ditchling was featured in a BBC documentary called "Storyville: A Very English Village". St Margaret's Church, visible from afar on top of its mound, is unmistakable by its square tower and squat spire. The area around the church reveals several Sarcen Stones which indicate a possible link to a pagan past. Opposite the church, the spectacular timber-framed Elizabethan house is Wings Place. Just south-east of Ditchling is a spur of the Downs called "Blackdog Hill" which is supposedly haunted by the ghost of a headless Black Dog.

Ditchling has two pubs. "The Bull" is a comfortable inn which also offers a comprehensive breakfast menu. "The White Horse", up towards the church, is an excellent blend of a friendly local and a gastropub with an imaginative menu. So one way to pass the day is to begin with breakfast in "the Bull" and finish with supper in "the White Horse". Near the latter is also the Ditchling Tea Room. At the crossroads, "The Green Welly" serves coffee, croissants and cakes, and some posh snacks including an 'all in one' breakfast ciabatta for £5.25.

Leg 1: Ditchling to Westmeston 2¾ km=1¾ miles

1 The walk begins with a short loop through this charming village. Turn left to the main village crossroads and turn right alongside The Bull. Walk up the High Street. In 130m, turn right on East End Lane. You pass a whole range of houses and cottages of every conceivable style. Where the lane curves right at Pardons and East End House, leave it by keeping left on Farm Lane. Go through a yellow metal gate and, in 20m, turn right past a playground, pass either side of the cricket pavilion, and go out to the main road via the exit for cars. Take a narrow footpath between hedges immediately opposite on the other side of the main road. This path is easy to miss as the signpost that says to Westmeston is almost hidden.

2 The path goes through an old kissing-gate and runs alongside a wall to a residential road. Turn right on the road for just 20m and fork left at a fingerpost onto a footpath. This narrow enclosed path goes over a bridge and a V-stile into a rough meadow. In 10m, at a fork, take the right-hand of two narrow paths across the meadow. The path soon zigzags right-left through the remains of a metal gate. In 100m, it veers right and continues along a narrow green path. In 20m, you have a choice at a fork, because they meet up again: either dark hazels (left) or light ash (right). You quickly come to a junction of paths in front a huge willow. Keep left, following the yellow arrow, entering a plantation of young ash trees. Keep to the left, part of the walk, now that the ascent is over and you can enjoy a gentle downward slope with wide vistas in all directions. The natural shape of the South Downs is so convoluted, you feel like an ant crawling over a piece of sculpture. Another piece of sculpture you cannot mistake is the new Amex Falmer Stadium of Brighton and Hove Albion.

- 3 At the other side of the meadow, go through a wooden gate and straight down another meadow. Your path swings to the right through hawthorn and goes through another wooden gate. Soon you have a meadow on your left and you come to a junction with a wooden gate and a post on your right. Go right through the gate and down a path across the green meadowside, soon close to a wire fence on your right. This is an especially rewarding area for observing butterflies in summer. At the bottom, go through a wooden gate and along the right-hand side of another lovely meadow with woodland on your right. Half way along the edge of the meadow, go through a gate on your right by a marker post.

- 4 The original version of this walk took a short cut, a narrow path up to slope. Since this was taken over by mountain bikers, a simpler route on wide paths is now provided here. Ignore a narrow path on your right and keep straight ahead on a wide woodland path with a forested slope on your right which rejoices in the name Moons Bottom. Follow this path gradually uphill until, after nearly 400m, you come out at the top to an open spot under power lines, with sudden views. Here there is a crossing of tracks, by a tree trunk with a relief carving of an otter. Turn sharp right here on a broad straight level sandy woodland path. After a while, the path starts to rise very gently and, about 500m since you joined this path, you get occasional clear glimpses through the trees of the open hillsides, both left and right. Your path now runs quite straight. In another 100m or so, look out for a post with a blue arrow, just on the right of the path. At the same time, looking left, you will see where the green field ends at a corner and gives way to woodland. Fork left opposite the marker post on a narrower path, thus leaving the official bridleway.

- 5 This path runs through the woodland of Highpark Wood, going in 300m, around a fallen tree trunk to meet a wide crossing track. Go straight over the track and continue on another narrow path through the wood, dense with bluebells in late spring. This path winds considerably but is always clear and there is a large meadow visible on your left as a guide. Finally you see, just ahead on the right, the main bridleway by a large corrugated iron shed. Just before two concrete posts at junction, turn left through a metal kissing-gate into the open meadow. You are on access land provided by Brighton and Hove Council and the fine open views south are a welcome change after the dark forest.
- 6 Keep ahead along the right-hand side of this meadow, enjoying the views, including east to Lewes and the spur of the South Downs. After 500m, at a corner, go straight ahead through a wooden gate. Immediately turn left, with the wire fence on your left and go through another wooden gate into a woodland of tall beeches. You are in the Piddingworth Plantation. Follow the main path through the wood which changes to more lowly trees with an occasional clearing. Finally, you emerge through a gate into another clover-filled open meadow. Tempting though this is, your route is now immediately right, following electricity wires.

Leg 3: Piddingworth Plantation to Jack and Jill 4½ km=2¾ miles

- 1 See map overleaf. Go through two wooden gates and cross the road, over a stile, onto a track opposite, still following the wires. Keep on down this wide grassy path and, at the end of the field, by a wooden swing-gate, where the wires continue straight on, ignore both and veer right to stay in the field. Soon on your left is the misnamed New Barn. Keep ahead, using a stile or a metal farm gate, over a track coming from the barn and continue downhill on a wide track. After a clump of trees, you reach a T-junction. Turn right here on a tarmac track. The track reaches the farm settlement of Lower Standean. Here is the true picture of a real working farm without gloss but with so much of interest. Every kind of farm machinery and building can be seen. The produce is remarkably varied, from poultry, sheep and pigs to stone bricks and prodigious quantities of wheat.

2 Continue through the farm, into West Sussex, passing a verdant sheep pasture on the right and some comfortable-looking pigsties. Stay on the main track uphill, passing a brick barn on your left. Turn sharp left with the track along the edge to a field and right at the corner. You come to a pair of metal gates and a crosspaths. This is the Sussex Border Path (SBP), the section that runs between the two Sussexes, from near East Grinstead to near Hove. Continue straight on regardless, along the left-hand side of the field. At the end, go through a line of hawthorn, through a gate and turn right onto an enclosed path. Here you gain your first sight of the windmills.

3 The path runs alongside a wheatfield and, in 200m, turns left on a path between fields. At a 3-way fingerpost in the corner, turn right. The path descends beside a field and curves uphill with golf links on your left and with the village of Pyecombe visible in the valley to the left. At a 4-way fingerpost, go straight on. You have joined the South Downs Way a long-distance trail running from Winchester to Eastbourne. Your track goes by a metal gate, passes New Barn Farm and comes to a junction just before the Windmills. The return route is sharp right here, but first you will want to make a quick excursion to the windmills.

4 Veer left to continue on the track to the windmills. Just before Jack, the black tower mill, turn right on a path by a fence. From here you get an all too fleeting glimpse of Jack.

There have been windmills on this site at least from 1765. Jack is a brick tower mill with a rotating cap that allowed the sweeps to face the wind. It was built in 1866. In 1906 both Jack and Jill fell into disuse and Jack was leased to various people as a holiday home. Jack is still in private hands. In 1973 Jack and Jill became movie stars with the making of the film "The Black Windmill", with Michael Caine, Janet Suzman and Donald Pleasence, no less. At the time of this revision, Jack is still awaiting restoration by his new owner (barrister Jolyon Maugham), with his sweeps removed and with his temporary white top.

Proceed to a corner where the path turns left. Continue until you have a gate ahead and the car park for Jill on the left. Go left between posts into the car park and left again on the track, immediately passing the entrance to Jill.

Jill is a post mill dating from 1821. She was originally built on Dyke Road in Brighton, where she was known as Lashmar's New Mill. In 1852 she was moved to Clayton. She has suffered a lot of damage in the past, mainly from storms, including the storm of 1987 when the sails were set in motion despite the brakes being on, which set fire to the mill (a constant hazard). Jill still grinds flour and is in working order under the ownership of Mid Sussex District Council. Jill is open to the public most Sundays from May to September.

Continue on the track, avoiding the private entrance to Jack, to the junction that you arrived at and fork left. (If you did not visit the windmills, turn sharp right.)

Leg 4: Jack and Jill to Ditchling 4¼ km=2¾ miles

- 1 Your track goes very gently uphill, through a metal gate, with fine views left to the villages of Keymer and Hassocks, to Oldland Windmill and across the Weald to the North Downs. After 650m, a bridleway meets you on the right. In another 400m, you are joined by the Sussex Border Path coming from the right. In another 50m, before a wooden gate ahead, you will notice an ornate 4-way fingerpost in a small meadow on the left. Turn left before you reach it, through a small wooden gate. Turn immediately right to go past the ornate fingerpost, which is part of Keymer's contribution to the South Downs Way. You are now back in East Sussex. Keep ahead into the next meadow, keeping close to a wire fence on your right, parallel to the track you were on. In 100m, there is a small wooden gate in the fence on your right and the hillside opens out. Veer left here away from the fence so that you are going diagonally down the slope. (Ignore a marker post visible over on your left). Go past the last large gorse bush on your right, about 50m from the fence, and veer a fraction to your right. You can now clearly see your path winding down the slope of the hill on the right of the deep valley known as Coombe Bottom.

- 2 Your clear chalky path is probably shared with a vast number of sheep. This hillside is known as Burnhouse Bostall. (The chalk may be very slippery here, whatever the conditions – take care!) As it nears the bottom, the path curves right and then sharp left through trees. It then takes you along a beautiful path of tall ash trees, past a horse pasture on your left. At the end of the pasture, ignore a stile on the right (which leads into the National Trust Ditchling Down) and continue on the track through a wooden gate beside a large metal gate. On reaching a lane, turn right. In 150m, turn left over a stile on a signed enclosed footpath, still on the Sussex Border Path.
- 3 You go through a small metal gate, past the bizarre converted Park Barn Farm, and through a similar gate. A small metal gate now leads you along the right-hand side of a meadow. Oldland Windmill is now clearly visible and the spire of Ditchling Church also comes into view. Go through a gap and a fraction left across the centre of the next meadow, then through a gap in a hedge under a large oak and a fraction right across the next meadow. On the other side, go through a small wooden gate, over a bridge and over a step-stile. The path runs between fences and comes out to a residential road. Turn immediately left to a track by no. 17 and continue on a narrow path by a fence and into trees. The path continues to follow the fence and finally arrives at a junction in Ditchling. Go straight across Beacon Road to join the pavement and veer left into the centre of the village where the walk began.

Getting there

By car: Ditchling is near Brighton, so the route is via the M23 / A23. Whether coming from the London area or from Brighton, turn off at the sign Hassocks A273. Keep following signs for Hassocks until you see a sign for Ditchling at a fork off to the right. Turn right at the crossroads in the middle of town. The free car park is almost immediately on the right.

By bus/train: bus 824 from Burgess Hill or Hassocks railway station, not Sunday. Check the timetables.
