Village, historic houses, parks, gardens

This is a fascinating walk through a green cityscape, beginning with a short loop around the “country village” of Hampstead and ending in Oxford Circus. It can be combined with the walk Hendon to Hampstead to make a lovely long green walk from outer to inner London.

The walk begins at Hampstead Underground Station (Northern Line).

Leg 1: A Small Circuit of Hampstead

See map overleaf. Turn right out of the station and at the crossroads and traffic lights go straight ahead up the narrow Holly Hill. The Holly Bush pub (now Fullers) is on the right. Fork right on Hollybush Hill and Hampstead Grove. Soon you pass the wrought iron gates of Fenton House on the left.

Fenton House is a National Trust 17th-century house full of fine porcelain and furniture and especially an outstanding collection of early keyboard instruments. The house is surrounded by an award-winning pretty walled garden of roses, vegetables and fruit trees. The house is open Wed-Sun non-winter months.

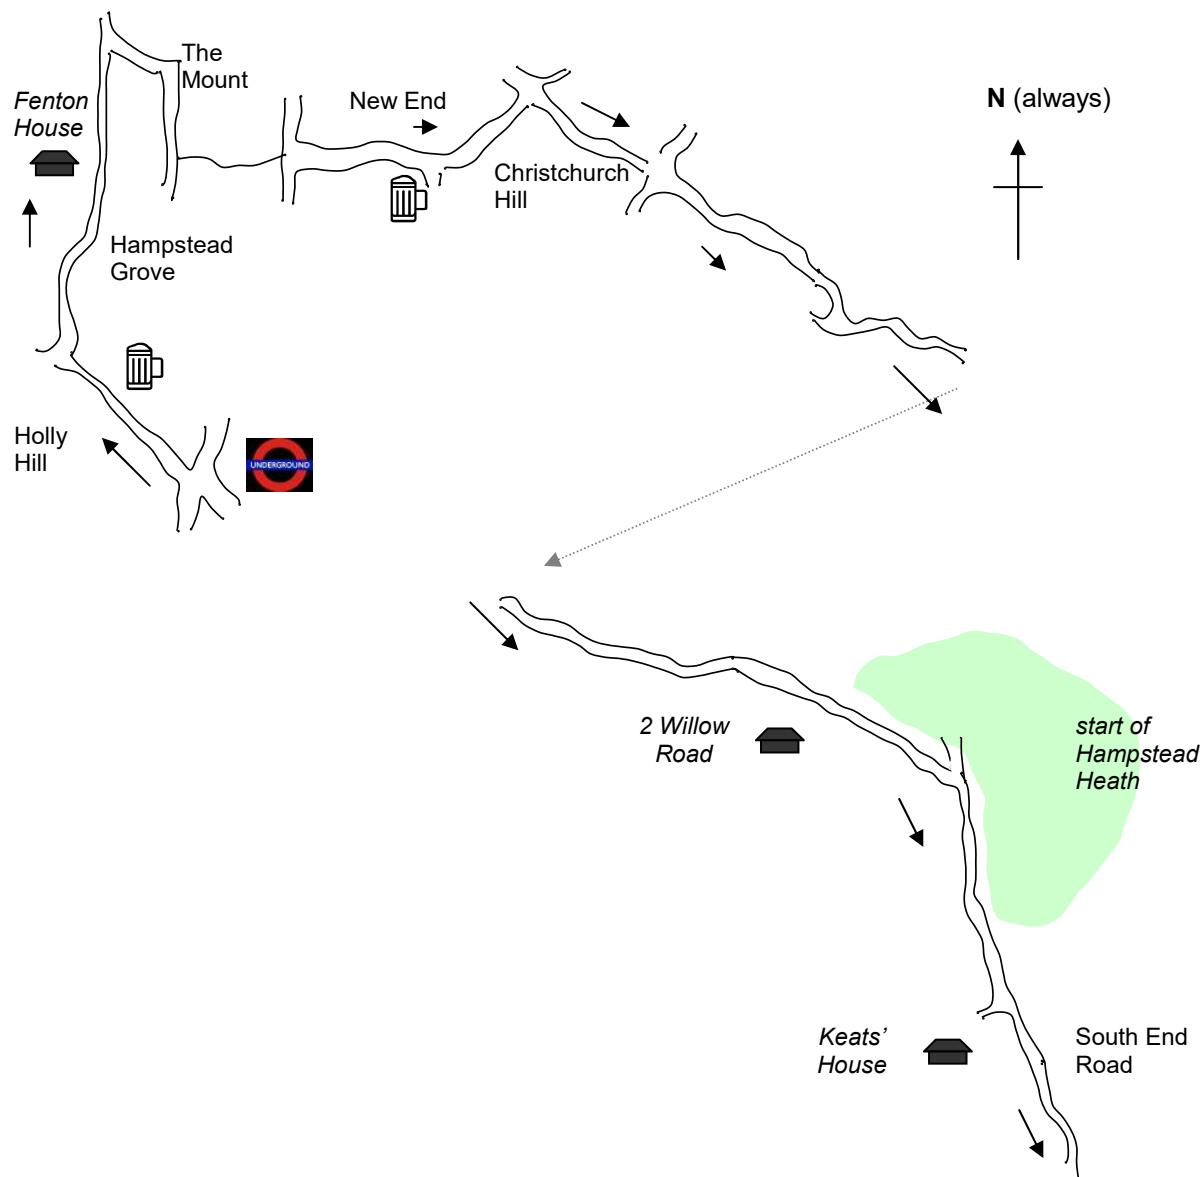

After the side entrance to Fenton House, turn right down The Mount Square and right into The Mount. Go down the steps on the left after garages and cross the main road into New End. Go past the Duke of Hamilton pub and the (now closed) New End Theatre and veer left by the Old White Bear (a refurbished pub-restaurant) into Well Road. Go past art studios on the left and turn right down Christchurch Hill. Cross Well Walk beside the Wells Tavern and continue down Christchurch Hill to the end where it merges with Willow Walk. A small section of the Heath is on the left.

Hampstead Heath is a vast rambling hilly area of woodland, heath and ponds covering 320 hectares (790 acres). See other walks in this series.

Soon you pass No. 2 Willow Road.

2 Willow Road is a unique home designed in 1939 by ground-breaking modernist architect Ernö Goldfinger for himself and his family. Goldfinger is known for his concrete high-rises such as the Trelllick Tower (see the walk “Portobello Road, Notting Hill, Holland Park” in this series). The house contains a collection of modern art, personal possessions and innovative furniture. Ian

Fleming lived nearby and named the eponymous villain of his James Bond novel 'Goldfinger' after him. (Their wives knew each other through tennis but there is no evidence that the two men were acquainted.) Interestingly, Goldfinger's own copy can be seen on one of his bookshelves. The house is run by the National Trust and is open 3-5pm Wed-Sun Mar-Oct (11am, 12, 1, 2pm by guided tour only).

Cross Downshire Hill and join South End Road. Just before the shops, on the right, is Keats Grove and Keats House is a little way on the left.

Keats House is a pleasant airy regency house where the poet John Keats lived from 1818 to 1820. Here he wrote "Ode to a Nightingale" and fell in love with Fanny Brawne, the girl next door. It is open afternoons, except Monday, in the warmer half of the year.

WC Continue down South End Road soon reaching Hampstead Heath railway station, a small central green, buses and shops and a public loo.

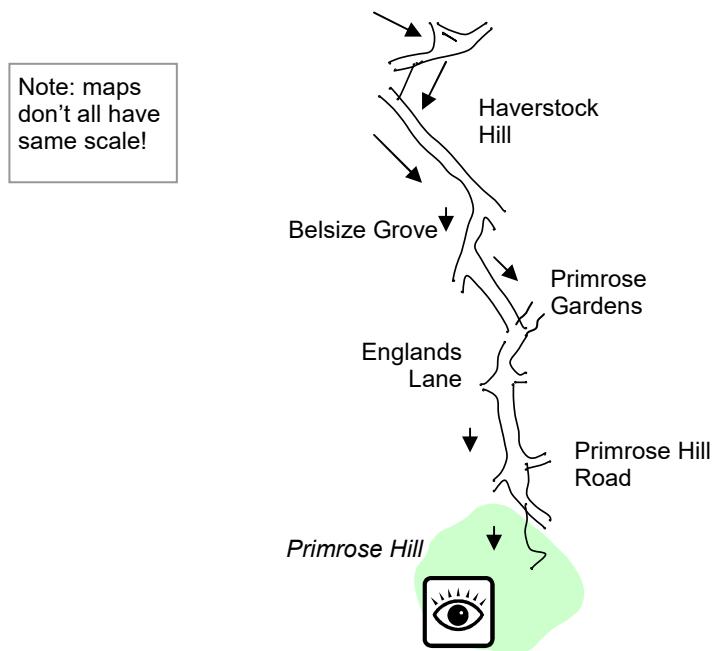

Leg 2: Heath Village to Primrose Hill

Primrose Hill, just to the north of Regent's Park, was always an open space or "park for the people" and its name bears testimony to its rural situation, when its sides were covered with early spring flowers. Nearby Chalk Farm was also just as its name suggests. Primrose Hill affords views over the whole of London and the lighting along its main routes make it an appealing sight at night time. The nearby village is extremely fashionable with many notable residents from media and politics (see the other walk in this series "Regent's Park, Camden Market, Kings Cross").

Ascend to the highest point where there is a direction finder and seats with views across London. Regents Park zoo is just below.

Leg 3: Primrose Hill via Regents Park to Marylebone Road

Regents Park, covering 166 hectare (410 acres), is one of the royal parks, famous for the Nash terraces (elegant stucco houses), zoo, villas, mosque, open air theatre and some of London's best gardens.

London Zoo began in 1828 not for recreation but as a centre for scientific study. A product of The Zoological Society of London it was the first in the world in nearly every category. Some of the specimens, especially some marsupials, are very rare. The Snowdon Aviary, north of the canal, pioneered the trend towards 'natural' environments, but the zoo has suffered from its restricted space and the change in public attitudes. It is undergoing extensive restoration despite severe financial constraints.

Eventually, the path wheels left and meets the Broad Walk, a wide avenue, by a large gothic fountain dated 1869. Turn right here. Several restaurants plus toilets will be found along the way. Follow the Broad Walk over Chester Road and into the Avenue Gardens where it is tempting to wander around the fountains and flower beds. Park Square Gardens over the road are private. So, just before a T-junction ahead with the Outer Circle, where there is a decorative urn on each side, turn left and wheel right to the road junction. Keep ahead along Park Square East to reach the very busy Marylebone Road.

Leg 4: Marylebone Road to Oxford Circus
