Meadows, views, forest, fine houses, country town, historical associations

In Brief

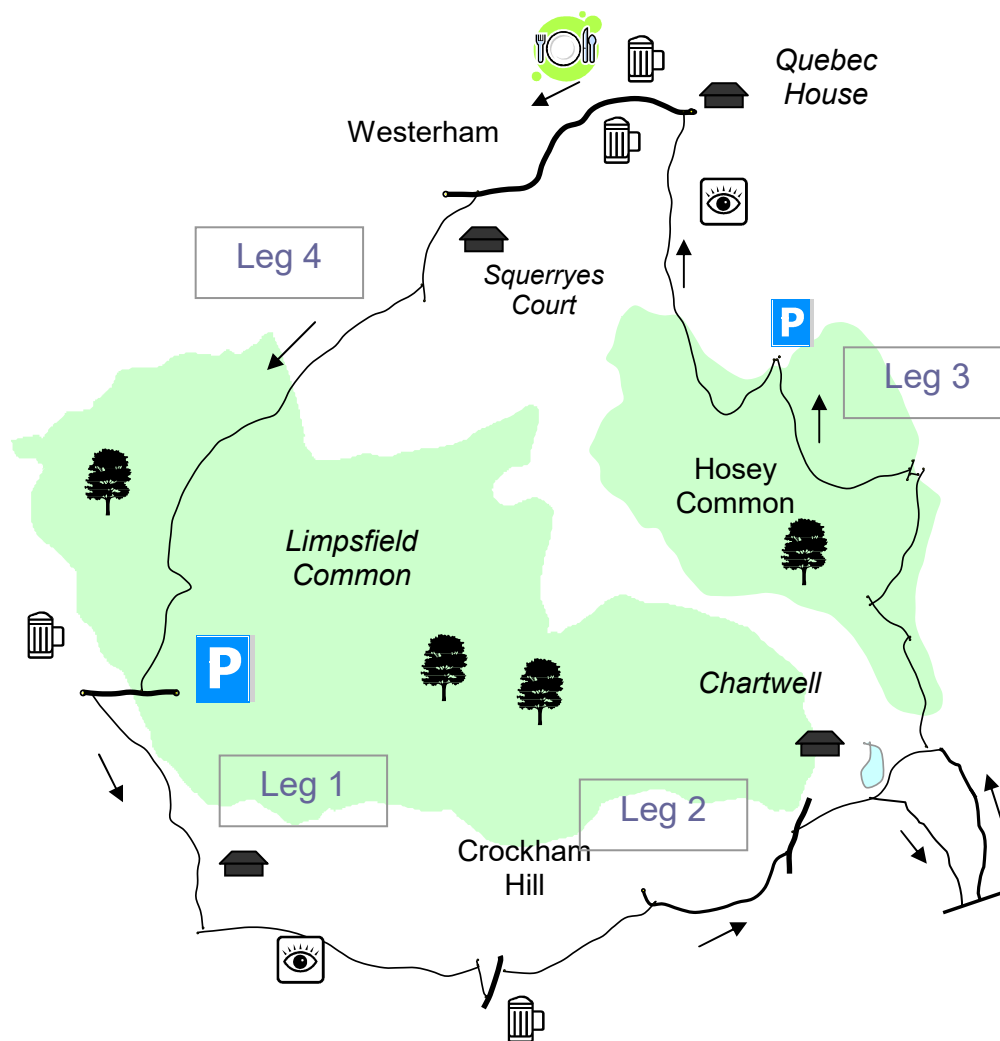

This fabulous walk combines the grassy meadows facing south over the Weald at the Kent-Surrey border with the beautiful woodland of Limpsfield Common and Hosey Common. It also passes Winston Churchill's house and visits the country town of Westerham with all its historic associations and two other great houses, not to mention its many good places to eat and drink. (To enquire at the Grasshopper on the Green, ring 01959 562926. Note: don't confuse it with the Grasshopper Inn which is out of own.)

Most of the terrain is dry and easy but there are one or two places that can be muddy in winter, so boots are usually necessary. There is at least one patch of nettles and scratchy undergrowth, evident in high summer, when you may find shorts uncomfortable. The stile count is average and generally the walk seems fine with a dog.

The walk begins at the Pine Wood car park, Limpsfield Common. The nearest very approximate postcode is RH8 0TB, grid ref TQ 429 518. It is on the Kent Hatch Road (B269), on the left side (if coming from the A25), 1½ miles=2 km from the A25 junction, just past the little modern St Andrews Hall. For more details see at the end of this text (→ Getting There). The Hosey Common car park (grid ref TQ 453 530) is also a good starting point, as is Westerham (with a parking charge?). Walkers recommend timing the walk so as not to reach Westerham at rush hour on a weekday because of the 300m along Goodley Stock Road which has no footway.

Bird's Eye View

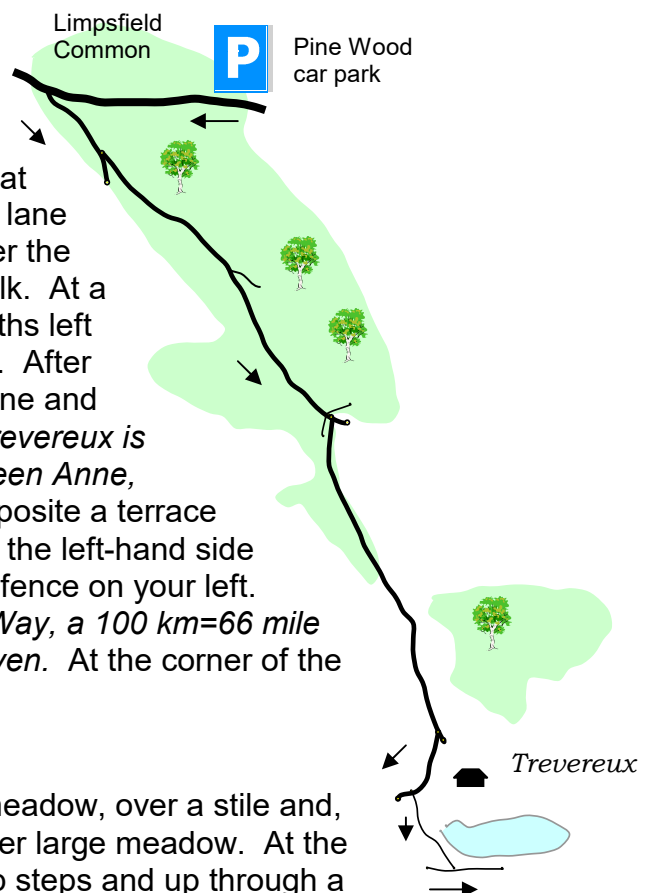

The Walk

Leg 1: Limpsfield Common to Crockham Hill 2½ km=1½ miles

Limpsfield Chart is the name of the surrounding settlement of scattered houses. 'Chart' or 'Chert' was simply the name of the area, meaning 'rough ground', before it was prefixed with the name of the larger village and parish to the West.

- 1 Go out of the car park to the road and turn right on it. In 200m, at a road junction, turn sharp left on a tarmac lane, Trevereux Hill. Keep to the left-hand tarmac, ignoring all turn-offs, and avoiding a footpath on the left. In 300m, ignore another wide footpath that forks left and continue downhill on the tarmac lane past more houses. You have views south over the Weald, the first of many on this part of the walk. At a junction before Grace's Cottage, avoid footpaths left and right and follow the lane as it curves right. After more than 200m, go past a gate across the lane and veer right before the entrance to a house. Trevereux is a grade II listed manor house dating from Queen Anne, damaged by fire and rebuilt in the 1990s. Opposite a terrace of cottages, turn left over a stile and go along the left-hand side of a meadow, passing a pond, staying near a fence on your left. You have been walking along the Vanguard Way, a 100 km=66 mile national trail running from Croydon to Newhaven. At the corner of the fence, at a crossing path, turn left.

Leg 2: Crockham Hill to Chartwell 2½ km=1½ miles

- 1 Turn left up the main road for 40m and then right on a lane signed to the Village Hall. Go past the school with its modern extensions. The Holy Trinity Church, built in 1842 by Charles Warde, is round on your left but your route is straight ahead through a small wooden swing gate and then across the grass with several benches on your left. Go through a small metal gate and keep ahead on a grassy meadow on a slight upward gradient. At the brow of the hill keep ahead over a two-plank bridge and then to a wooden swing-gate in the hedgerow, disregarding a large metal gate higher up to its left. The path goes over a long bridge and up the left-hand side of a sheep meadow. At the top of the rise, go left over a stile. On your left is a spring, one of several here from which water emerges to feed the gardens and the hillside. Follow a boardwalk, keeping you quite dry over this marshy area, and then go up a long flight of steps. You reach a lane, Froghole Lane. Turn right on the lane in front of a fine converted oast house. Stay on the lane for some distance.

- 2 As you go, you have fine views right across the Weald and some splendid properties to admire. At a large gate across the lane, go through a small gate beside it and keep right on the tarmac. You pass the fine house Mariners with its sculpted waterfowl. Near the end of the lane, bear left just before a road and go through a small wooden gate to the road. Turn left along the road and, in 70m, turn right on a drive signed to Chartwell Farm with great views right over the Weald to the South Downs.

- 3 At a fork keep right, ignoring the National Trust sign for Chartwell. At a junction, go ahead between gates. You are suddenly faced with the magnificent two groups of oast houses at Chartwell Farm. The first group of three conjoined oasts are probably early 1800s and have a drying shed attached. The other group are newer. Oasts are, or were, kilns for drying hops. The cowl at the top turns with the wind. Continue through a swing-gate and onto a drive over a stream. On your left is the garden of Chartwell. If you glance over the big wooden gate, you will see a bronze sculpture of the seated Churchills and some of the garden. (If you did this walk in an earlier year, you may remember that you went left here through the garden. Since 2014, the NT extended the “paying” section to include these woods. Instead, there is a new beautiful route through the valleys.)

Chartwell was Winston Churchill's country home from 1924 until his death in 1965. It is one of the most visited places of the National Trust, yet the house is relatively small. When Churchill first saw it in 1922 it was a much smaller nondescript tastelessly modified ex-farmhouse but his enthusiasm for laying bricks soon created the large west wing and generally transformed it. Inside there are many mementos of Churchill's life, including several of his paintings and a room dedicated to the various honours he accrued from home and abroad. The imprint of his wife Clementine is also evident in many of the rooms. The cottage in the garden was used by Churchill as a refuge for his hobby of painting and after his death it was partly converted into a convincingly cluttered studio-cum-gallery for his many water colours and oil paintings. The garden is something quite special with its ponds, rose garden and orchard. For a war leader born in Blenheim Palace it is surprising to read that Churchill had enormous difficulty raising the cash to buy and convert the property and in 1946 a group of friends had to buy it and rent it back to him for a pittance.

- 4 See left-hand map overleaf. Follow the wide path with a fence on your right, then an avenue of trees. You are now in a wonderful grassy path between sloping meadows. The path leads through a large metal gate and down a path between more pastures with terrific views. At the end, 650m from the stile, go through a new kissing gate onto Puddledock Lane and turn left on it. In only 50m, after a white house and before Windswept, turn left uphill on a narrow tarmac lane, Hosey Common Lane. You now have a long gradual climb on this very quiet lane, with the compensation of great views and, in spring, banks of bluebells. At the top, you have views left across the valley to Chartwell. After a total of 1¼ km on this lane, you will see on your left a metal barrier, a stile and a NT sign for Chartwell. (Funnily enough, there is implied public access through here.) Ignore the gate and continue on the lane for nearly 200m to reach a major crossing path with fingerposts. This is part of the Greensand Way (GW), a long-distance path that follows the Greensand Ridge from Haslemere to near Ashford in Kent. Turn right on the GW.

your right. (Open to the public Fri and Sun pm mid-April to mid-Sep). At a definite bend, leave the track as it bends away left uphill and keep ahead past an unneeded metal kissing gate on a wide path leading into a meadow.

- 3 Immediately turn right along the right-hand side of the meadow, very steeply uphill. At the top, continue along the right-hand side of a large grassy meadow. Soon you see the top of the church in Westerham. (There are several paths from here into the town. The route described here shows you the whole town. You could shorten the route a bit by aiming for the western edge.) After a marker post and a crossing path, fork right to stay near the right-hand side of the meadow. Go through a walker's metal gate in the corner. Descend a grassy slope, aiming for another yellow arrow on a post barely visible ahead. Veer right at the post and follow the left-hand side of a meadow across a bridge over the River Darent, through a metal kissing gate, along an alley with terraced houses and out to the main road. Welcome to Westerham! Opposite you, a bit to the right, is the NT's Quebec House.

Quebec House was the childhood home of General James Wolfe, of which more later. This small 16th-century redbrick house has enormous charm and the small rooms contain original furniture and many historical references. The small enchanting garden contains features such as straw beehives set into the wall. The house and garden are open most of the year.

Leg 4: Westerham to Limsfield Common 3½ km=2 miles

Westerham is named in the Domesday book as the 'Hundred of Ostreham', indicating a subdivision of Kent where leaders met regularly. There is evidence of Celtic and Roman habitation here, making the site at least 4000 years old. The River Darent flows through Westerham and in the past powered several mills. Westerham has a long history of brewing beer and its distinctive yeast is still used by the current Westerham (micro-)Brewery.

- 1 Turn left on the main road and cross it with care. In 70m, turn right on a footpath at a little fingerpost by a garden fence which leads to the church.

St Mary's church dates from the 1300s. It was here that General Wolfe and three of Winston Churchill's grandchildren were baptised. Inside there are a number of artifacts that commemorate both men and their families, including a Burne-Jones / William Morris window dedicated to Wolfe.

Turn left in front of the church and continue to the town square. Around the square there are a number of tea shops. (The Tudor Rose is recommended by walkers.) As you proceed, the Grasshopper on the Green (a free house) and the George and Dragon then, on the other side, the Kings Arms which is also a hotel offering rooms with four-poster beds. In the square you will notice a reclining statue of Churchill and one of General Wolfe with brandished sword.

General James Wolfe (1727–1759) was a young soldier and the hero of Quebec. Great Britain in the 1700s was at the peak of an extraordinary period of military power and Wolfe could be said to personify this. He was born here in the local vicarage. He first won distinction in a bloody campaign during the War of Austrian Succession, then in the '45 Jacobite rebellion. During the Seven Years War he took part in a daring assault on Rochefort and came to the attention of William Pitt the Elder who saw in him an opportunity to win eastern Canada for the British crown. The key to this was the taking of Quebec. After a long siege, Wolfe decided the issue by commanding his forces to climb the Heights of Abraham, a line of cliffs that had been left undefended by the French who were expecting an attack by an easier route. Wolfe was felled by a musket ball but lived long enough to learn of the victory. He lies buried in Greenwich, his former home.

As you walk, you will notice how long and narrow this little town is. The pavement switches from left to right. Eventually, after the main road bends to the right and on the outskirts of the town, you pass the a 12th-century cottage that was used by William Pitt the Younger. After a gradual left and right bend, you finally reach a road junction on the left. Turn left here on Goodley Stock, a road name that aptly describes the Warde family who have lived for nearly 300 years in Squerryes Court and had a huge influence on the life of Westerham.

- 2] Soon you have a fine view across the lake to the house.

Squerryes Court was built at the turn of the 1700s, making it early Georgian, and it shows the best qualities of that period with its elegant well-proportioned redbrick construction and tall chimneys. It sits in a fine hilly garden which contains some inventive topiary. Inside it is a delight, including some fine old master paintings and much porcelain, silver and furniture. The house and garden are unfortunately no longer open to the public.

Continue for 300m as far as a house on the left, and turn right here on a tarmac lane. In 100m, turn left at a waymarker post over small bridge and right along the edge of a field (sometimes very overgrown with crops in summer: suggest keeping near the green verge). Note the biblical exhortation on the grain store to “be sober be vigilant” – against what is not clear. If the path is ploughed up at the beginning, it soon improves, reaching a stile into a horse meadow. After the stile you will find that the earth is churned up by horses’ hooves, a strictly temporary state of affairs. Keep along the right-hand side of the meadow and, in the far corner, go over a stile into woods. Welcome back to Surrey and Limpsfield Common!

- 3 The next sections navigate you through the beautiful and rather complex Limpsfield Common and you need to be careful not to lose your way. In 30m, go over a wide crossing path and, after another 100m, another wide forestry path. In 100m, ignore posts with yellow arrows pointing left and right and continue on a sunken path. Soon you reach a junction close to a tarmac lane and a large double metal gate, both on your right. Zigzag left and quickly right on the first path into the woods, keeping the same direction. You are now walking parallel to that lane on your right through a woodland of majestic tall conifers. In 100m, at a post with a yellow arrow, take the left fork, the wider option. In another 350m on this narrow woodland path, you come up to a seat, a National Trust sign and a small pond, at a junction of several much wider paths. (In very dry weather the pond may be just a depression.)

- 4 Turn left in front of the pond and immediately right on a wide track. In about 100m, you reach another NT sign. Turn sharp right immediately before the sign on a wide rather messy dirt path which soon ascends. In 100m, at a T-junction, turn left on a wide path. Soon you reach a junction with the Greensand Way, indicated by the distinctive GW arrows. (If you would like final refreshment, turn right on the GW, fork left in 30m and, in 100m, veer right on a wide track that ends at the village of Limpsfield Chart where the Carpenters Arms awaits, just down the road ahead. Go to the main road and turn left to return to the car park.) Just 10m after crossing the GW, fork right away from the wide path on a narrower path. This path soon widens and goes over other paths before reaching the car park where the walk began.

Getting there

By car: if coming from the London area via the M25, come off at Junction 6, turn right onto the A22 and left at a roundabout onto the A25 through Oxted and Limpsfield and, after some traffic lights, turn half right onto the B269 Kent Hatch Road, signposted Edenbridge.

If coming from the east, again take the A25. From the south, take the B2026 through Crockham Hill.

By bus / train: bus 594 from Oxted station. Various buses to Westerham.
