Woodland, lake, nature reserve

In Brief

Vann Lake is part of a Nature Reserve and is rich in trees, other plant life and small animals. In spring, bluebells are abundant. The lake is very well known in the neighbourhood but this walk finds an unusual route that takes you the whole length of the lake. The return gives you three options. The third option, the longest, was added in 2016, taking you on signed footpaths through more forest and a farm.

There are no nettles and in summer any good footwear should be fine. But in the wetter seasons, you will be glad to be wearing boots because of the occasional muddy sections. Dogs are welcome.

The walk begins off the A29 in Ockley. If there is no cricket match, park in School Lane (postcode RH5 5TS, grid ref 146399) opposite the cricket pavilion or the school. Otherwise, there are spaces opposite the Inn on the Green, some spaces in the close by the Cricketers Arms and even one or two by the grass verge in Friday Street (the lane opposite School Lane) half way down just before the first house. For a little more detail, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

Before or after the walk, don't miss the chance to take a circular stroll to see the remarkable houses and cottages that border Ockley Green.

Ockley is believed to be the same as Aclea, the site of the defeat of the Danes by the Saxon Ethelwulf in a great battle in 851, as recorded in the Saxon chronicle. William Camden puts it thus: "Aethelwolp the sonne of Egbert, who having beene professed in the holy orders and released by the Popes authority, when hee had possession of his fathers kingdome by right of inheritance, joined battaile with the Danes, fought with good successe, and slew all the valiantest men among them." It lies either side on Stane Street, the long straight Roman road to Noviomagus Reginorum (Chichester).

- 1 Opposite School Lane, cross the main road and go down Friday Street, soon passing some houses on the right. As the road bends right, ignore an unmarked track and turn left at a fingerpost on a footpath, going over a stile into a meadow where there are two yellow arrows. Veer right and cross the meadow diagonally. (A possible future diversion may take you round two sides (2016)). At the other side, go through a large metal gate (butt watch out for a rather excitable goat!) and turn left on a gravel drive between houses.
- 2 Go through a wooden gate into a meadow, go forward 20m, and turn right at the corner of a fence. Now veer slightly left away from the fence, passing an electricity pole on your right. On your right are the recently renovated buildings of Vann Farm. At the other side, go through a large metal gate onto a wide unsigned tree-lined path. In 100m, where the path enters broader woodland, keep to the right on a higher parallel path. In 60m, ignore an unmarked straight path on your right. Just before the path narrows and begins to descend more steeply towards a bridge in the distance, turn right on a good unmarked straight level path. (Straight ahead over the bridge is Church Copse with many unmapped paths to be explored another day.)

- 3 Soon the path reaches some tall conifers, is joined from the right by another path and curves left. You are now on a high ridge with the meandering stream below on your left. Where your path begins to descend towards a stream bed, you come to a junction of small paths. Your overall direction here will be straight on. Turn right at a fork on an ascending path and, in 10m, turn left on a descending path, going over a ditch. Your path veers right over a knoll and left down again. Follow this winding path beside an arm of the lake which gradually widens. Soon you pass a noticeboard for Vann Lake Nature Reserve.

Vann Lake (properly known as Vann Lake and Ockley Woods) is a Site of Special Scientific Interest, partly managed by the Surrey Trust for Nature Conservation. Like so many lakes, it is a wooded ravine which was dammed to form a hammer pond. The combination of clay and limestone makes this ancient wood extremely diverse in the species of plants, insects and other animals it supports, especially the mosses and liverworts that cling to the outcrops, the rare dormice, the many tree species and no less than 611 types of fungi.

The path veers right, away from the lake, passing close to paddocks on your right. It then winds through trees, down steps, over a plank bridge and finally rises to a T-junction with a wide raised path.

- 4 The route is right here on the raised path. However, first turn left for a short distance to view the head of the lake where there is a wooden walkway over the torrential stream as it races down a channel on your right. Now retrace your steps to resume the walk. In just 20m, keep left, quickly meeting a fingerpost and a T-junction.

Decision point. If you want to return direct to Ockley, skip to the end of this text and follow the text under Direct Return. Otherwise, for a more satisfying return with a chance to see more of the woodland or the Nature Reserve, continue with the next stage.

- 5 Turn left at the fingerposted T-junction on a bridleway. In 80m, you come to a junction by another fingerpost. Turn down left here and cross a wide bridge over the stream. On the left you can just view the stepped cascade that was built to carry the water channel. On the right you look down the stream valley. You arrive at another fingerpost indicating a path straight ahead and a path on the left.

Decision point. You now have a choice of two routes. The shorter route through the Nature Reserve uses some interesting easy but unmarked paths. The longer route takes you on a footpath through dense forest with an attractive episode on good paths by a farm.

- 6a Nature Reserve Route. Ignore all the pointers and turn right on an unmarked path. Keep straight ahead passing a sign for the nature reserve and two paths on the left. At the corner of a field, the path turns right downhill and reaches a new long wooden bridge. Cross the bridge and follow the path as it immediately curves right and rises to the corner of a forest plantation at a bend in a path. Turn left on the path. At the end of two sections of plantation, in a total of 300m, opposite a hidden fingerpost on your left, turn sharp right on a wide footpath.

Now skip over the next two sections and resume the walk at section 8.

6b Eversheds Farm Route. Keep straight on at the fingerpost. This wide path through Birches Wood begins wide and later gets squeezed by a mass of sedge grass. In 200m you meet a wide crossing track. Cross straight over the track onto a narrow forest path which shortly becomes clearer, although you need to concentrate. You pass a small info plaque for Candy's Copse on your right and, after a total of 250m, you meet another wide crossing path by another small plaque. All the special paths through the nature reserve are so straight and clear, it's as if they want to tempt you off the official footpath. Once again, go straight over the track on a narrow forest path. Soon you need to hop over a fallen birch and, shortly after that, your path forks with a fingerpost visible 20m ahead. Take the right fork, with the fingerpost on your left, and immediately keep right on a level path running along a wide level strip of sedge grass. You reach the edge of a large field and a 3-way fingerpost.

7 Turn right on a bridleway, with the field on your left and woodland on your right. You come out on a wonderful green path beside a line of oaks. Several neglected plots on your right lead to the buildings of Eversheds Farm. 10m before the first grey barn, turn right through a large metal gate. (The stile is broken.) Go along the left-hand side of a meadow and, in 200m, over a stile. After the end of a field on your left, your path leads down into woods and takes you over a long bridge across a stream. Immediately after the bridge, at a fingerpost, turn right on a path leading uphill. At the next fingerpost, veer left over a bank to meet a wide crossing track. Cross straight over the track on a wide woodland path.

The Nature Reserve Route re-joins the walk here.

8 The path passes through mixed forest. In 400m, when the forest ends, go through a metal gate or over a stile into a meadow. Soon on the left you see Ockley Windmill.

Ockley Windmill (more correctly Elmer's windmill or Almer's Mill), an octagonal smock mill, milled grain for the whole of the 1800s and stood here for nearly 150 years until, after WW2, it became a virtual ruin with only the base left. Supported by a campaign by local people, the site owner has decided to rebuild the windmill and to restore it to its past appearance for use as a dwelling. At the time of this revision (2013-16), the tower is complete, awaiting only the blades and sails.

Continue along the right-hand side of the meadow, shortly going over a crossing path by a fingerpost. \(Or, as an option, turn left on this path, doing the Windmill Return, described at the end of this text.\) On the other side, go through an awkward metal gate or over a stile. Keep to the right-hand side of the next small meadow. Then go over a stile onto a path leading to a lane. Go left on the lane, taking you back to the start. Welcome back to Ockley village where the walk began!

Ockley has two pubs. The Cricketers Arms is a cosy traditional pub. The Inn on the Green is nicely situated and serves customers well, except for accommodation, it seems.

Direct Return

Use this route if you want to get straight back to the start after the lake.

Turn sharp right at the signposted T-junction on a wide bridleway. This path soon runs past Vann House where it narrows and comes out between a fence and a hedge to a junction of drives. Go straight ahead on a tarmac lane avoiding Vann Farm Road on the right. The lane takes you back to the starting point.

Windmill Return

This alternative return from the longer options passes the windmill and gives you a chance for purchases of grocery or refreshments in the Cricketers.

Turn left on the crossing path. (Some walkers cut the corner before reaching the fingerpost.) Go across the centre of a rough meadow, heading straight for the mill, going over a narrow stile. Ascending a grassy slope, you pass the mill on your left, joining a driveway. After passing a converted barn and a pond, you reach the main road. Turn right on the road, passing a mini market by a filling station and the Cricketers Arms.

Getting there

By car: Ockley is on the main A29 (Bognor) Road about 7 miles south of Dorking.

By bus/train: bus Arriva 50 from Horsham station. Check the timetables. Ockley station is far from the village and does not appear to have a bus service.
