In Brief

This walk takes you along part of the celebrated White Horse Trail in mid Wiltshire, a high ridge walk with terrific views in all directions. There is a long climb near the start, enough to class this walk as “moderate difficulty” but the gradient will not really challenge anyone and the reward when you reach the top is outstanding. At the southern end, the walk takes you along a good stretch of the Kennet and Avon Canal where you can watch the colourful canal boats. In between, there are meadows, pretty thatched cottages and a couple of pubs.

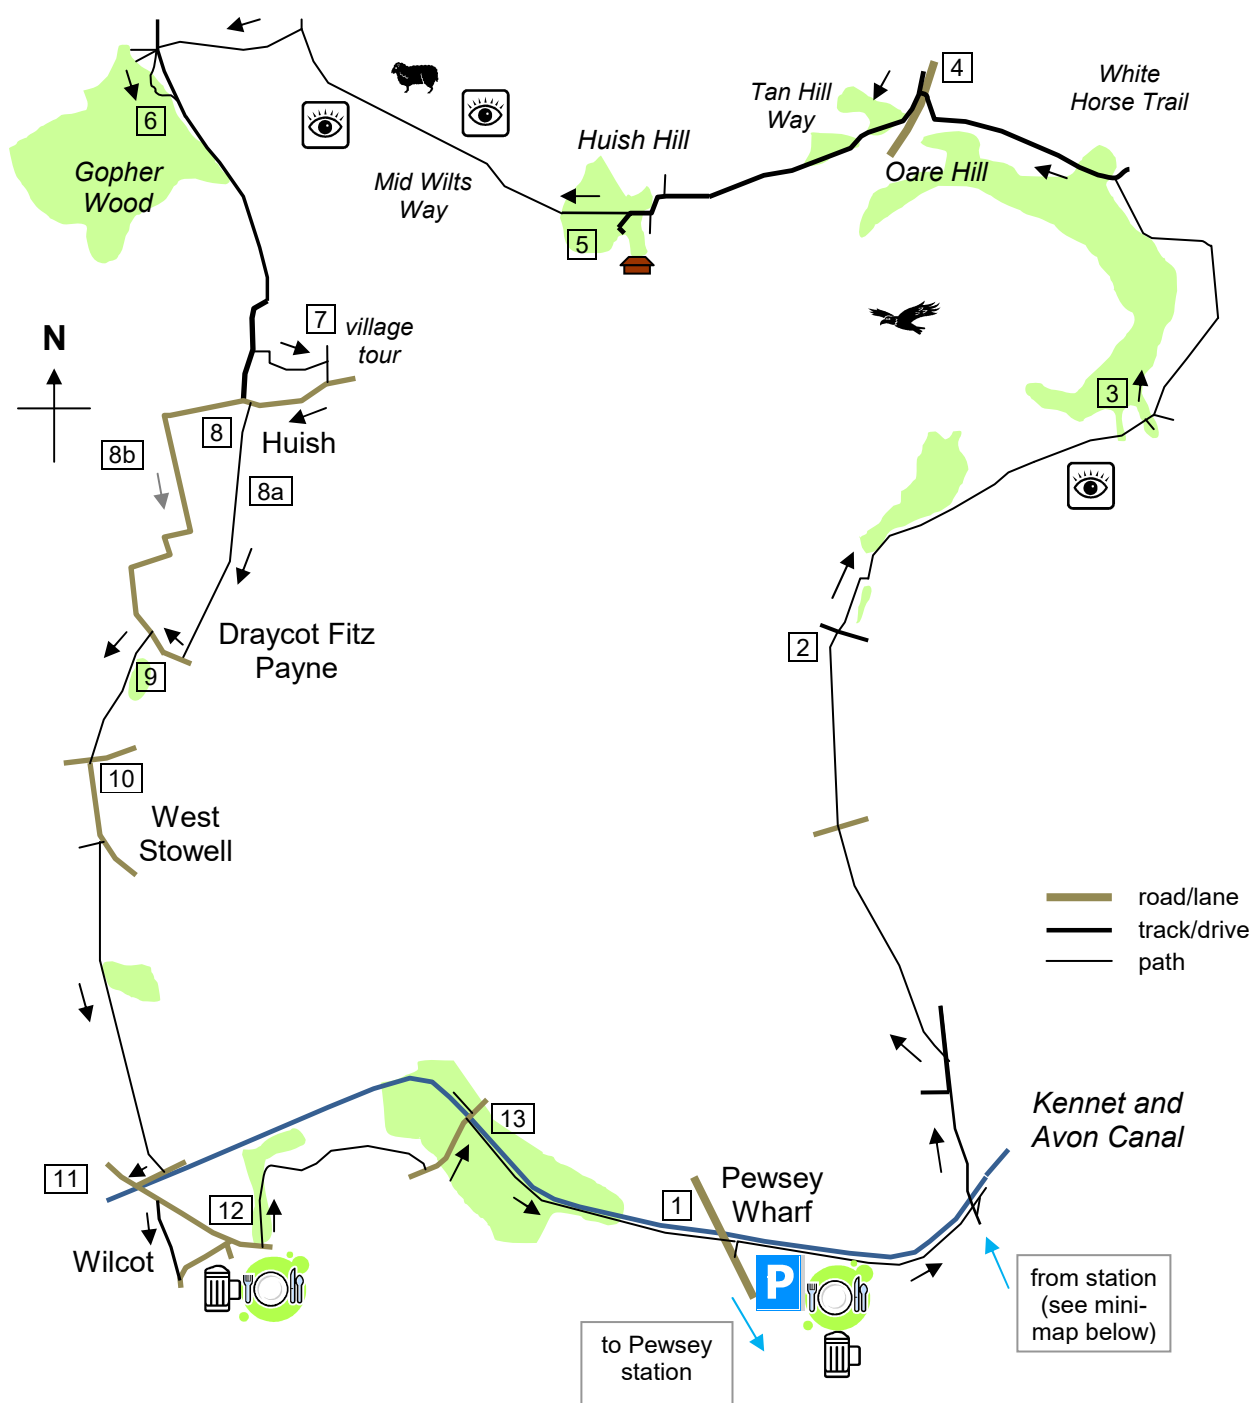

? There is no unavoidable undergrowth worth speaking of on this walk. The paths are generally dry or grassy, but the crop field before Wilcot may be a little squishy in winter. Your dog can come with you on this adventure.

You can arrive by train at Pewsey Station, with a short interesting extension adding about a mile to the length of the walk.

For motorists, the walk begins at Pewsey Wharf, Pewsey, near Marlborough, Wiltshire, www.w3w.co/crunchy.shuttling.bulge, approximate postcode SN9 5HY. There is a charge, as 2025, of £4 for 8 hours (note: the parking machine does not accept cards, only coins, although paybyphone is available) and the money goes to help maintain the canal. You can park free in Old Hospital Road in Pewsey (some 7 minutes' walk south of Pewsey Wharf) or on the roadside elsewhere, such as Wilcot*, postcode SN9 5NN, www.w3w.co/handbag.grumbling.dome (*park tight beside the hedge to allow tractors to pass!). For more details, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

The Kennet and Avon canal links London (via the Thames at Reading) with the Bristol Channel, in the east the Kennet navigation, in the west the Avon, with the canal to link them. The canal was begun in 1724 and finished in 1810. The canal fell into disrepair in the 1900s until 1990 when leisure and tourism spurred a restoration project.

If you arrived at Pewsey station, skip immediately to near the end of this text and the section called From Station.

- 1 Starting at Pewsey Wharf, walk along the towpath with the canal on your left. After an easy 750m watching the canal boats ply the water, you reach Pains Bridge, a typical brick bridge of the period. Pass under the bridge, turn sharp right up a bank* and sharp right again to cross the bridge. (*On your left is an entrance to the Jones's Mill Nature Reserve, a 33-ha woodland and wetland area, worth exploring.)

The route from Pewsey station joins here.

Keep ahead on a wide green path under ash and oak trees. The high table of the great long White Horse Trail (WHT), which you will be climbing shortly, looms ahead to your right. In 300m or so, you meet a driveway coming from Inlands Farm. Keep straight on on a dirt track. In nearly 100m, turn left over a stile. (Alternatively, as seasoned walkers tend to do, you could stay on the track and turn left on the lane.) There is a sign for the White Horse Trail on the post – you will be following these signs until you descend from the high hills.

There are (or were) no less than thirteen white horse figures in Wiltshire, the oldest and best known being the Westbury White Horse and the (1804) Marlborough White Horse. Some were rediscovered hidden under grass and were remade. The White Horse Trail is a 151 km=94 mile circular walk which visits the principal eight figures, plus other archaeological sites.

Your path veers right, cutting the corner of the field, and takes you over a stile in the hedge. Take a path straight ahead across the crop field. After a gap in the line of trees, continue similarly in the next, shorter, field. Note the little raised lookout hut to your right. An unneeded stile leads to a tarmac lane. Cross straight over the lane and take a track opposite along the left-hand side of a crop field. Your route veers right to meet a wide track.

- 2 Cross straight over through a small metal gate. The climb has begun! Take a path up the slope of the meadow heading for trees at the top. The village of Oare can be glimpsed on your left. Before you reach the top, look right for a small metal gate. Go right through this gate and keep up the left-hand side of a wild meadow. You are also walking part of the Mid Wiltshire Way (MWW), a 109 km=68 mile walk across the county, useful because it covers the long ridge of hills. Your path gets steeper and steeper and finally you reach the top and a trig point, with terrific views south across the Vale of Pewsey and, for the first time, north as well. Continue on a path beside a wire fence on your left, passing a (dry) dew pond on your right. You come through a large metal gate (or over a stile) on what is now a wide grass path. Soon there is deep woodland on your left. Ahead of you soon is a large silvery metal kissing-gate.

- 3 Ignore a path on your right before the gate and go through the gate to meet various direction pointers. Ignore the path that forks right and stay on the left, thus leaving the MWW, but staying on the WHT (unsigned at this point). Your path follows the left-hand edge of the meadow and curves right at the top to meet two large metal gates. Go left through the second gate (or over a stile) onto a path which runs between two banks of nettles and docks. Your path winds left and right and ends at a dense line of trees. Turn left here on a wide stony track along Oare Hill (if the metal fieldgate is locked, you can bypass it via a path around trees on its right). This high trail is part of the Tan Hill Way a 19 km=12 mile walk along the ridge. The track finally bends right and meets the main road.

- 4 Cross the main road to a dusty drive opposite and turn left on it. Stay on the main drive as it curves away from the road passing green meadows on Huish Hill. After 750m, ignore a footpath on the right as the drive suddenly bends left. In 40m, turn right with the drive, ignoring the narrow footpath straight ahead. In 50m, where the drive bends left again to Huish Hill House, leave the drive by keeping straight ahead on a farm track. In 200m, you come through a large metal gate* onto a high sheep pasture which is a wide ridge with terrific views each side. (*If the gate is locked there is small metal swing gate 10m to its left which may be hidden by undergrowth.)
- 5 Continue straight ahead towards some gates, clearly visible in the fence on the far side. Go through the right-hand set of gates and continue as before in the next meadow. As you near the end of the meadow, shift to the right-hand side and go through a small metal gate next to two larger gates. Immediately go left through another small metal gate and take a grass path straight ahead between shallow banks. This bendy path ends in about 400m at a fence. Go through the smaller of two metal gates here to reach a signpost at a multiple junction. Here you will say farewell to the national trails and make your way home.
- 6 Turn sharp left on a wide track downhill but immediately (as an option) fork right* on a more level woodland path. (*This little loop is more scenic than the track although possibly a little scratchy.) Your path descends gradually through the treescape of Gopher Wood and meets the track again. Continue downhill, ignoring a yellow arrow on your left. Shortly, the break in the trees affords a fine view of the hills where you were walking. Finally you reach a farm marking the start of the village of Huish. Keep right and left round the property, passing the courtyard of the big farmhouse, going through a small metal gate (or the large metal gate if open). On your right shortly is a small wooden gate leading to St Nicholas Church. The ancient village of Huish was recorded in the Domesday Book; the church, built in the 1200s, used to be much larger, indicating the past importance of this small settlement. Huish is famous for its "heart", a copse of that shape, but the author couldn't find it.
- 7 This section is a little loop round the thatched village, with several delightful surprises. Although all the paths are public, you will shortly see why this little tour is probably best suited to one or two people, or children. Others: simply stay on the lane. Just 70m after the gate to the church, go left through a small gate into a garden with a lake and a weeping willow. It is wonderful to discover that the path through this private garden is in fact a footpath. Your route is straight on up four steps, passing some sculpture, turning right and left, always following the main path. You pass some standing stones on your left and on your right the owners are building a (private) pond bridge. Keep straight on to pass near a large metal gate and a fence and now follow a narrow path beside a meadow and a wooden fence on your left. The path zigzags to meet a large green meadow. Turn right on the grass, going down a narrow path through woods to a tarmac lane. Turn right on the lane. Note the faux deer in the sheep meadow on your left. You pass a stableyard and on each side there are rows of thatches. (The last row on the left was restored a few years ago.) Just before a road junction, there is a sign for a footpath pointing left. (If you did not do this little loop, it is on your right when you turn left at the T-junction.)

At the time of writing and in 2025, the footpath was deeply ploughed up and badly marked and the author took the quiet lanes instead. If this situation persists, do Section 8b. Since then, a walker has provided this guide, given below in Section 8a.

- 8a Follow the (overgrown) footpath through trees into the left-hand crop field at the other side. (From this point until emerging onto a lane, you are walking in a southerly direction with little evidence of any footpath). Keep to the hedge at the right-hand edge of the field, minding any nettles, and enter a second field. Follow round by the hedge at the left of this field and pass through a gate into an adjacent field on the left of the hedge. Head for and pass through a large metal gate near the right-hand corner of this next field. Enter the farmyard, where there is another footpath sign, and turn right on a lane. Pass a house on the left, head downhill soon seeing a concrete track to a barn on your right. At this point go left, opposite, through a metal gate into a large green pasture. Now skip to section 9.
- 8b Continue straight on at the road junction. \(If you did *not* do the little loop, turn **right** at the T-junction.\) Now follow the narrow lane round five corners. The only traffic you are likely to meet is a huge tractor where you have to stand well aside: it has exclusive use. About 150m after the fifth corner, the lane bends a fraction to the left and shortly there is a concrete track to a barn on your left and a large metal gate on your right. Go right through the gate into a large green pasture.
- 9 At the time of writing this was a sheep field but there might be some quiet cattle here when you walk. In case you prefer to avoid them for any reason, you can continue on the lanes, turning **right** and **right** again to meet the footpath at the other end. Keep to the left-hand edge. In 100m you pass a copse on your left which conceals some ponds. Keep direction after the copse, following a shallow ridge, heading for a large metal gate about 50m to the left of the corner. Go through (and close!) the metal gate to reach the head of a T-junction of tarmac lanes.
- 10 Cross straight over to a tarmac lane opposite, in the direction Wilcot. You pass a large thatch, China Cottage, in the hamlet of West Stowell. (East Stowell is a deserted village.) Shortly after, as the lane bends left, leave the lane by keeping right. Ignore the wide path to the right and go left over a stile into a crop field. At the time of writing the field was of head-high maize but, unlike some such fields, the path was perfectly passable. Follow a clear straight path through the crops. In 300m, at the other end, continue straight over a grassy crossing path and shortly go through a large metal gate (easier than the adjoining stile). Now take a clear path which runs with trees on your left at first, then in a straight line across a crop field. After 200m, the path goes over a strip of green and resumes similarly in the next field. At the far end, veer left a fraction to exit the field, via a stile or a large metal gate, to a lane in Wilcot.
- 11 Turn right on the lane. You can step onto the bank of the Kennet and Avon canal through a gap on the left. It is worth looking right to the fine brick bridge that you are about to cross, but you have to follow the lane to cross it. If you do *not* want to visit Wilcot and the charming *Golden Swan*, you can instead simply turn **left** along the towpath, through a wooden gate to the road after 1 km, **right** over the bridge and **left** on the towpath again, skipping to section 12. Turn sharp left shortly over the bridge and follow the road for 80m to the corner of a recreation ground. Fork right on a rough driveway along the edge, passing on your right some of the greystone houses which were designed as a matching group long ago for this village. Continue to a tarmac lane. Your route is sharp left, but by turning right you can see some of the oldest houses in the village, plus the Church of the Holy Cross which is definitely worth a visit.

Having turned sharp left, passing some thatched cottages, in no time you reach on your right the Golden Swan at the corner, in its garden, a soothing spot to pass some relaxed moments. The Golden Swan is a Wadsworth inn, and not bad for that. Food is available every day except the first Sunday of each month. The inn is open all day at weekends. It is also an excellent B&B in case you decide to stop over.

Wilcot could also be very ancient: there was a Roman villa here. The church dates from around 1200. Inside, there are Romanesque details on the columns which survived a fire of 1876. According to a 400-year-old legend, the Vicarage is haunted by the sound of a tolling bell.

- 12 After a possible break, cross straight over the road junction in the direction Pewsey. About 25m after a rough track on your left, and after passing a locked metal gate, go left over a stile next to a gate onto a signposted path. Follow the left-hand side of the field to the bottom, going over a stile at the end, or through the metal fieldgate to its left, into a reedy meadow. Turn immediately right in the meadow to take a path close to the right-hand edge. Stay in the grassy field as it runs beside a steeply banked field on your right. In 500m, at the end of the field, go through a large metal gate on the right, out to the road. Turn left on the road for 200m through woodland until you reach the bridge over the canal. Turn right through a new small metal gate, immediately before the bridge onto the towpath.

- 13 Follow the towpath, enjoying the sight of the boats on the canal for the best part of 1 km until you pass under the road bridge. Immediately you reach the car park at Pewsey Wharf, where the walk began.

The Waterfront Bar and Bistro is unusual, with the bar upstairs – rather like a working-men's club – and very friendly, serving a great local ale.

To return to Pewsey station, go to the section below called Return to Station.

From / Return to Pewsey Station 2 km=1¼ miles round trip

From Station. Exit the station on the side of the car park, on the opposite side from the main station building. Go out to the main road and turn right for 25m. Just before the railway bridge, fork left on a tarmac path called Way's Way. In 100m, veer left on a tarmac drive (or turn right to visit the town). Follow the drive, passing the Mill House and its garden, over a stream onto a narrower surfaced footpath. The path leads up into a green open space. Immediately fork left on a level path, passing thatches and gardens, and continue on a tarmac drive, down to a junction. Turn left on a sunken path. Your path passes willows and a stream and goes over the stream and along a boardwalk. Ignore a stile on your left and keep straight on to reach a bridge over the canal. Go over the bridge to join the main walk at the indicated point in section 1.

Getting there

By car: Pewsey Wharf can be reached from Marlborough which is accessed from Junction 15 on the M4. When in 8 miles you reach the town, follow signs for A345 Pewsey, Upavon, Amesbury. If at first you don't see these, follow signs for Salisbury. (But the most attractive route is down that wonderful wide High Street and left at the bottom on the Pewsey Road.) The car park is on the left immediately after you go over the canal bridge, opposite the entrance to the Saint Francis school and in front of the Waterfront Bar and Bistro. It is about 1 mile before Pewsey.

You can also reach Marlborough on the A4, e.g. from the A34, the Newbury bypass.

The author came via the M3 and Andover, through Ludgershall on the A342 (a scenic route taking you over the downs into the Vale of Pewsey).

By train: regular daily service from London Paddington, about 1 hr.
