Woodland, hills, views

The Royal Oak is a freehouse in a 16th-century cottage serving three permanent ales and a rota of guest ales, plus a full menu of meaty hot dishes. It is a favourite destination for get-out-of-towners because of its isolation and situation in one of the best walking areas. The pub is haunted by the ghost of one who is believed to be a sheep rustler who operated on the South Downs in about 1680, going by the name of William "Shagger" Shepherd. He was pursued across the Downs by a group of angry farmers and was eventually shot after taking refuge in the Royal Oak. The pub is not open all day, not even at weekends, so you need to arrive before 2pm for lunch-time service. The pub is open 11.30-2.30pm and 6pm-11pm but closed Mondays (presumably also Bank Holidays), so the best time to start the walk might be around 10-11am or late afternoon Tuesday to Sunday. It's advisable to check the website (royaloakhooksway.co.uk) or ring 01243-535257 because the landlord sometimes takes a holiday or is ill, in which case the pub does not open.

There are one or two small patches of nettles, so shorts may be inadvisable. Good shoes or trainers are adequate. The walk is fine for your dog too.

The walk begins at the pub car park in Hooksway (postcode PO18 9JZ, grid ref 815 162, www.w3w.co/airbag.crumples.technical) so the refreshments are at the end of the walk. Dave the landlord says it is fine to park there when the pub is temporarily closed provided that you have something to eat and/or drink there before or after. For more details of the location, see at the end of this text (→ Getting There).

The Walk

- 1 With your back to the pub, go left, past the car park. Shortly you reach a junction with three possible routes ahead. Avoid the left fork and the track straight ahead and instead turn right to a wooden gate and turn left by a redundant stile on a footpath (currently unsigned). Follow the path uphill through beeches, then go over a grassy crossing path, continuing between rowans whose leaves and berries contrast delightfully with the dark woodland earlier. Go over another grassy crossing path, then another at an angle. Finally you meet a path coming in from the right and the path veers left to a T-junction. Turn right on this rough track. In only 50m, fork left at a fingerpost on another grassy path, gently uphill. The path goes through a large (usually open?) metal gate, crosses a chalky track and continues ahead along the left-hand side of a field on a grassy path. On your right, you now have a fine view to the South Downs nearer the sea, around Chichester. In the far corner, go over a stile and descend quite steeply towards a small stone-and-brick building at Monkton Farm. Turn sharp left up a flinty track in the long green valley.

Monkton Farm was once a flourishing crofters' village until the 1400s. The name recalls its connection with a monastic order. You can still make out some of the banks made for housing or cultivation. No one is sure why the village was deserted. Disease or the result of enclosures were the most prominent reasons at that time. Certainly, there has only been one farm here for at least 500 years. Now the area is a nature reserve and especially a centre for bird watching since hawfinches, chaffinches, bramblings and firecrests are observed here.

- 2 Go through a metal kissing-gate and continue along the valley, gently rising through a sheep pasture. At the top, go through a large metal gate, usually open, beside a disused stile. The track has now mainly disappeared and you are in another, even larger, pasture. Keep to the left and, at the first corner, turn left around the edge. In the far corner, go through a metal kissing-gate, beside a large wooden gate. Continue a few metres to a crossing of tracks at a 4-way fingerpost. Turn left at the crossing. The flinty track goes gently downhill through trees. Later you pass through a lighter area, passing gates leading to land belonging to the West Dean

Estate, which you ignore. After a further stretch under trees, you finally reach the pub carpark, where the walk began.

Getting there

By car: If coming from the north on the A3, take the A272, signposted Midhurst, and simply follow the brown tourist signs for Uppark (with the oak leaves symbol), round the outskirts of Petersfield and eventually through South Harting and fork left onto the B2141. From Chichester, take the B2141 from Mid Lavant. Both Hooksway and the Royal Oak are signposted east down a narrow lane.
